CALENDARS.

Instructions to Editors.

The Master of the Rolls desires to call the attention of the Editors of Calendars to the following considerations, with a view to secure uniformity of plan in the important works on which they are engaged:—

He is anxious to extend, as far as is consistent with proper economy and despatch, the utility of the Calendars of State Papers now publishing under his control: 1st. As the most efficient means of making the national archives accessible to all who are interested in historical inquiries; 2nd. As the best justification of the liberality and munificence of the Government in throwing open these papers to the public, and providing proper catalogues of their contents at the national expense.

The greater number of the readers who will consult and value these works can have little or no opportunity of visiting the Public Record Office, in which these papers are deposited. The means for consulting the originals must necessarily be limited when readers live at a distance from the metropolis; still more if they are residents of Scotland, Ireland, distant colonies, or foreign states. Even when such an opportunity does exist, the difficulty of mastering the original hands in which these papers are written will deter many readers from consulting them. Above all, their great variety and number must present formidable obstacles to literary inquirers, however able, sanguine, and energetic, when the information contained in them is not made accessible by satisfactory Calendars.

The Master of the Rolls considers that, without superseding the necessity of consulting the originals, every Editor ought to frame his Calendar in such a manner that it shall present, in as condensed a form as possible, a correct index of the contents of the papers described in it. He considers that the entries should be so minute as to enable the reader to discover not only the general contents of the originals, but also what they do not contain. If the information be not sufficiently precise, if facts and names be omitted or concealed under a vague and general description, the reader will be often misled, he will assume that where the abstracts are silent as to information to be found in the documents, such information does not exist; or, he will have to examine every original in detail, and thus one great purpose will have been lost for which these Calendars have been compiled.

As the documents are various, the Master of the Rolls considers that they will demand a corresponding mode of treatment. The following rules are to be observed:—

1st. All formal and official documents, such as letters of credence, warrants, grants, and the like, should be described as briefly as possible.

2nd. Letters and documents referring to one subject only should be catalogued as briefly as is consistent with correctness. But when they contain miscellaneous news, such a description should be given as will enable a reader to form an adequate notion of the variety of their contents.

3rd. Wherever a letter or paper is especially difficult to decipher, or the allusions more than ordinarily obscure, it will be advisable for the Editor to adhere, as closely as is consistent with brevity, to the text of the document. He is to do the same when it contains secret or very rare information.

4th. Where the Editor has deciphered letters in cipher, the decipher may be printed at full length. But when a contemporary or authorised decipher exists it will be sufficient to treat the cipher as an ordinary document.

5th. Striking peculiarities of expression, proverbs, manners, &c. are to be noticed.

6th. Original dates are to be given at the close of each entry, that the reader may know the exact evidence by which the marginal dates are determined.

7th. Where letters are endorsed by the receivers and the date of their delivery specified, these endorsements are to be recorded.

8th. The number of written pages of each document is to be specified, as a security for its integrity, and that readers may know what proportion the abstract bears to the original.

9th. The language of every document is to be specified. If, however, the greater part of the collection be in English, it will be sufficient to denote those only which are in a different tongue.

10th. Where documents have been printed, a reference should be given to the publication.

11th. Each series is to be chronological.

12th. The Prefaces of Editors, in explanation of documents in the volume, are not to exceed fifty pages, unless the written permission of the Master of the Rolls to the contrary be obtained.

* * Editors employed in foreign archives are to transcribe at full length important and secret papers.

Wills Earl of Hillsborough was appointed one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, 21st January 1768 (p. 422), [Colonial affairs being assigned to him.]

Principal
the papers.

The correspondence with the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland occupies a large portion of the volume. The letters of Commodore Spry in relation to the affairs of this country with the Empire of Morocco are numerous; and there are several papers touching upon the struggles for American independence. Troubles in the Isle of Man on its acquisition by the Crown, and riots in Jersey, produce many papers; whilst in and about London the riots arising out of Wilkes' election, arrest, trial, and imprisonment, the riots of the sailors, the coal meters, the tailors, the Spitalfields weavers, the labourers in Kent, and the sailors at Newcastle, also contribute their quota. Restrictions imposed by Government on the British workman in his endeavours to carry his skill to other countries continue to produce correspondence.

All the above subjects will now be noticed seriatim.

Ireland.

The Lord Lieutenants of Ireland during this period were successively the Earl of Hertford, the Earl of Bristol, and Viscount Townshend. Of the conduct of affairs by the two former nothing need here be said, such papers as there are being of little interest; but during the administration of the government of Ireland by Lord Townshend the letters which he wrote to Lords Shelburne and Weymouth from 1767 to 1769, and their replies, are so full of interest, and contain so much of the political history of Ireland, that the Editor has thought it desirable to attempt a somewhat more detailed sketch, or rather chronicle, of the more important political events of this period than is contained in Mr. Froude's second volume on the English in Ireland in the Eighteenth Century, pp. 52-87. Mr. Froude has made frequent quotations from and reference to these papers. If any apology is necessary for the appearance in this Preface of much that is also contained in the above volume, it must be found in the facility it will afford the reader in tracing the progress of events as detailed in the correspondence.

Very many of the letters are marked "Private," "Private and confidential," "Secret and separate," "Most secret," or with some other equivalent term.

15th Oct. 1767.—George Viscount Townshend having been appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, his safe arrival there was announced on this day (578); and on— 1767.

20th Oct.—The Irish Parliament met. (585.)

27th Oct.—One of the earliest questions which engaged the attention of Parliament related to the terms on which the Judges should hold their appointments. The Lord Lieutenant says that his recommendation that they should hold their offices during good behaviour had met with universal approbation. A second question was the appointment of a Chancellor, which had been already deferred; many thought it was a settled point never to give the office to a native. A third question was the duration of the Parliament; and a fourth (and one that was ever recurring) the augmentation of the army to the extent of three or four thousand men. In respect to this last, guarantees were asked that 12,000 men should remain in Ireland. (593.)

29th Oct.—His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant was blamed in the Earl of Shelburne's letter of 29th Oct. 1767 (595) for his explicitness in the speech at the opening of Parliament, in which his words ought to have been general, and further because in His Majesty's name he had recommended a provision to secure the Judges in their offices during good behaviour, which was expressly

1767. contrary to the opinion of the Lords who met at the Lord President's on the eve of his departure. (595.)

5th Nov.—The Lord Lieutenant made a spirited reply. He thought he ought rather to have been commended than reprimanded. Though at first he had hoped to obtain the augmentation as fully as His Majesty could wish, he found the country was unable to bear the expense. It would be dangerous to attempt an augmentation of more than 2,000 private men; nor would any one advise him to propose this, until he could say what security His Majesty would give that the 12,000 men should constantly reside in Ireland. His Excellency asked if the King would give such an assurance. He says if anything could have enabled him to carry on the King's affairs with better success, it would have been punctuality on the part of Lord Shelburne in informing him (the Lord Lieutenant) of His Majesty's determination with respect to the appointment of the Chancellor, the determination of the Government as to the Septennial Bill, and His Majesty's determination respecting pensions, &c. His Lordship's letter, his Excellency says, is little short of an arraignment, and for this reason he must insist on his defence being laid before His Majesty, whereupon, if it should not be thought a full answer to every charge, he must request to be recalled. (602.)

5th Nov.—A letter from the Earl of Shelburne, of the same date as the last, must have crossed that of the Lord Lieutenant. In this it is mentioned that His Majesty was unanimously advised to give the assurance as regards the 12,000 men, as far as was consistent with the safety of both kingdoms in case of any sudden or extraordinary emergency. The Government were of opinion that the duration of the Parliaments should be for eight years. As to the surmise on the part of the Irish that the seals were never to be given to a native of Ireland, no such exclusion had ever been thought of. The Earl further conveys His Majesty's approval of the zeal of his Excellency. It was His Majesty's determination to keep the granting of pensions in his own hands. (605.)

13th Nov.—The Lord Lieutenant says that the two great obstacles to the augmentation were the state of the revenue, and the jealousy of the advocates of the militia lest the measure should preclude their carrying the Militia Bill. (616.)

15th Nov.—The Lord Lieutenant was very anxious to get the power to make use of these grants of pensions, or, as he puts it, to transmit the wishes of the persons whose services he was desirous of using at such critical times as the present, when he was making an effort to obtain the augmentation. (622.)

15th Nov.—In another letter of the same date the Lord Lieutenant writes that he was startled by the project of a Short Money Bill, in which the supplies were only to be granted for three months at a time. This arose from the great discontent which had grown up among all ranks of the people at the non-appointment of a Chancellor. As this measure would be a great indignity to His Majesty, the Lord Lieutenant did what he could to resist it. A council was summoned, and the opinion of part of the King's servants seemed to be that such a motion could not be resisted. The members of the House of Commons thought this was the only certain method which they had of obtaining the popular Bills about which they were anxious. (623.)

16th Nov.—Mr. Ponsonby (who was the Speaker and also head of the Revenue Board), and Lord Shannon (Master General of the Ordnance), prevailed upon their friends to desist from their motion as to the Short Money Bill, but

1767. were of opinion that an inquiry into the state of the nation might be taken up. The Lord Lieutenant again pressed upon Lord Shelburne that some marks of the Royal favour should be bestowed upon those who had stood "early and firmly against the torrent." If the Lord Lieutenant could prevent an address relative to the Courts of Judicature, and could satisfy the people that the Bill for limitation of Parliaments would be returned from England, he thought His Majesty's wishes with regard to the augmentation might be gratified. (624.)

18th Nov.—There seems to have been a considerable misunderstanding between the King's Ministers in England and the Lord Lieutenant as regards the instructions given to the latter. His Excellency acted upon a minute, given to him by Mr. Conway, of what took place at a meeting the night before he left. This minute, the Earl of Shelburne says, could have been nothing more than private notes, the Lord Lieutenant having received by word of mouth the fullest instructions, and the whole being a fitter subject for confidential conversation than for a minute of a Cabinet. The Earl continues that the limitation of the duration of Parliaments would be supported in council by the King's servants, and that the King wondered at the difficulty that was made about the augmentation in the army, as it would not be much above 3,000 men. His Majesty wished to know the names of the principal persons who were for or against it, with their reasons; and as to the promise of 12,000 men constantly remaining in Ireland, His Majesty would only authorise general words to be used, such as—"as far as " is consistent with such a defence as the safety of both " kingdoms, in the case of any sudden or extraordinary
" emergency, may require." (627.) The Earl of Shelburne in this letter also touches upon a delicate subject, viz., the drawing in question of the nature of the connexion between Great Britain and Ireland, which, he says, it had always been thought sound policy to avoid. 1767.

21st Nov.—The surmises of the Irish as to the indisposition to appoint a native to the vacant Chancellorship were fulfilled, for the Earl of Shelburne announces the appointment as Lord Chancellor of Mr. Justice Hewitt, of the Court of King's Bench in England, who was made Lord Lifford. (634.)

24th Nov.—The Earl expresses His Majesty's extreme surprise at a motion made in respect to the vacancy of the seals, and at the unreasonableness of the clamour. In England the seals had at times been kept open many months longer. He says further that it was impossible to express the astonishment felt in England at the design of a Short Money Bill, a measure which struck at the dignity of the King and the very being of government. The contrivers of such a Bill stood condemned both in the sight of God and man. It could not be looked upon in any other light than as one of the meanest stratagems which low cunning, narrow parts, and interested motives could suggest to any set of men in public affairs. His Majesty expressed his approval of the Lord Lieutenant, and was persuaded that he would be able to defeat any attempts made to sow mistrust between His Majesty and his people. (637.)

29th Nov.—In an interesting letter the Lord Lieutenant again returns to the subject of what he should have introduced in the speech to the Irish Parliament, and gives his recollections of what took place at the Lord President's on the evening of 8th Oct. He says that he thought and still thinks, both from Mr. Conway's note and his own recollection, that he had exactly followed what was then absolutely fixed, and what at former meet-

1767. ings had been universally agreed to, not without the participation of the King himself. He again suggests whether it would not be more advisable that he should be recalled. (642.)

12th Dec.—The Lord Lieutenant gives some indication of the means by which he thought that the augmentation might probably be carried. If certain points could be obtained for Mr. Speaker and Lord Shannon they would heartily support and carry through the ordinary business of the Government, it being understood that they should have their share of the disposal of the other favours of His Majesty. They thought it absolutely necessary to have the assistance of the Duke of Leinster and Lord Tyrone, together with that of some of the popular speakers in the House of Commons, such as Sir William Osborne, Mr. Flood, &c. His Excellency again returns to the matter of the pensions, and says that unless power was given him to be explicit to some few persons, as well as to create some new offices in the different departments of Government, he feared the augmentation would not be carried. (664.)

In the succeeding letter of the same date (12th Dec.) the offices and grants demanded by Lord Shannon, Mr. Ponsonby, the Speaker, and the Prime Sergeant are explicitly set down; viz., Lord Shannon to be one of the three Lords Justices, and the office of Examiner of Customs now in possession of the eldest son of Mr. Ponsonby, to be given to him and his brother. The Prime Sergeant expected that a grant should be made to his two sons, and the survivor of them, of some office for life of the value of 500*l.* a year at least, and that his wife should be created a viscountess at the end of the session. (665.)

12th Dec.—The Lord Lieutenant says that he is sorry to say that these are their terms, for he thinks the two former at least ought to carry on the King's business without any consideration whatever. (665, see also 669.) 1767.

16th Dec. — His Excellency recommends an advance in military rank for Lord Bellamont, and that a place should be given to Mr. Gore, a brother of Lord Annaly, for his zeal in promoting the augmentation, the last having conducted the King's business through the House of Lords with great ability. (673.)

19th Dec.—His Majesty still held on to his determination not to have the granting of pensions taken out of his hands, but promised, however, that he would consider the cases of those who should exert themselves for the support of the Government and the good of Ireland. (678.)

19th Dec.—A measure which it was thought would be popular engaged the attention of the Lord Lieutenant and the King's servants in Ireland, viz. a tax of 4*s.* in the pound on absentee placemen and pensioners. It was originally proposed solely for the purpose of augmenting the army. The Earl of Shelburne writes that it was a mark of respect due to the Crown, that the King might be enabled to exempt from its operation some persons on the pension list, and others who had rendered great services. (678.) These exemptions, the Lord Lieutenant saw, would make the tax produce little or nothing. (725.)

3rd Jan. 1768.—The opening of the year 1768 produced a letter from his Excellency in reply to the mortifying observations of Lord Shelburne, charging his Excellency with inattention in respect to the Money Bill and the tax on absentees. He goes very fully into the business, and says that the disagreeable parts of the Bill were things he could not prevent. He also proposes additional points to carry the augmentation through with success. (725.) 1768.

1768. 11th Jan.—Mr. Speaker and Lord Shannon would not agree to support the augmentation, and were of opinion that any attempt to augment the army by any other than an Irish Act would occasion great dissatisfaction; and the Prime Serjeant judged it in vain to undertake the measure without their support: nor would the Attorney General lend his assistance. His Excellency thought that every art would be used to prejudice the minds of the people against the measure during the delay, especially as the return of the Septennial Bill was deferred. (733.)

26th Jan.—Affairs were in a very critical state, and his Excellency summoned a meeting of His Majesty's principal servants and conductors of the business of the Government in the House of Commons, to consider the embarrassing motions expected from the Opposition; but he could not get any explicit answer from them in regard to their support of the Government. His Excellency complains of the weakness of the Government, and the impossibility of executing His Majesty's commands. (750.)

28th Jan.—Motions embarrassing to the Government continued to be introduced, and his Excellency says that Lord Shannon, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Serjeant, and the Attorney General had finally determined not to take any share in conducting the business of the Government; in fact they had gone into determined opposition. His Excellency asks for full and explicit instructions in this very critical conjuncture, and, further, to whom he was to resort; and whether it would be prudent to apply to those who were generally in opposition, who were called the independent gentlemen; also what ought to be done with this Parliament. In the present weak state of the Government perhaps nothing less than a prorogation would serve. (756.)

2nd Feb. — The Earl of Shelburne writes that His Majesty had on the previous day approved of the Bill for limiting the duration of Parliament in Ireland, reserving a few alterations. Eight years was to be its limit, and the present Parliament was to determine on the 24th of June next. This was to be considered a most gracious condescension on the part of His Majesty.

The Earl enclosed a draft of an Act proposed in the English House of Commons on the previous day, to raise 15,235 men in Ireland. The intention was that 12,331 men should be kept in Ireland for its defence. The King trusted that it would meet with the support of the majority in both Houses in Ireland. If it failed, the King could be no stranger to the scandalous cause of the miscarriage. Those who distinguished themselves in the support of the measure would reap in due time the fruits of their zeal. (763.)

10th Feb.—Lord Shelburne observes, in regard to the explicit instructions for which his Excellency presses, that as he was on the spot, he must be the best judge of what would give vigour to the Government; and whatever he suggested would be immediately considered. His Majesty left it to his Excellency to make a change amongst his servants, and to send for the independent gentlemen as suggested, as well as to prorogue Parliament, if the case should require it. (772.)

16th Feb.—The country gentlemen, with the Duke of Leinster and Lord Tyrone's friends, had entirely defeated the designs of the other prevailing party, and had put an end to the inquiry into the Military Establishment. The Royal assent was given to the Octennial Bill, which gave universal satisfaction. His Excellency was much afraid, from the dissolution being fixed, it would not promote the augmentation; because most of its best

1768. friends dared not, as candidates, avow an additional vote of credit to augment a standing army. (778.)

26th Feb.—The Lord Lieutenant thought it desirable only to consult with such of the King's servants as were hearty in their support; and with their aid, and that of the independent gentlemen, he hoped to carry the augmentation. The country gentlemen were anxious to go to their constituencies to look after their elections, and yet would be sorry to leave the King's service exposed to the enterprises of ambition. (791.)

5th March.—The Lord Lieutenant held a confidential meeting as to the method of introducing the augmentation before Parliament. The opinion seemed to be that there would be a difficulty in getting a sufficient number of members to attend so late in the session, the independent gentlemen being intent on securing their elections. There was hardly a county where there was not a contest. The meeting submitted that the question should be put off till the next Parliament. (800.)

14th March.—The Earl announced the King's directions for the Augmentation Bill to be proceeded with, to be proposed in the House of Commons by a message from the Lord Lieutenant. In regard to the security, his Excellency was to keep within the words of Lord Shelburne's letter of 5th Nov. 1767. (805.)

19th April.—The augmentation was proposed on the 19th of April, when the Lord Lieutenant writes that he believed many who wished well to His Majesty's service would be afraid to support the Bill on the eve of a general election with the same zeal they would exert at another time. (844.)

3rd May.—A motion for an address to His Majesty in relation to the augmentation was proposed in the Irish

House of Commons and lost, the numbers being 108 against 104. The Lord Lieutenant says that the Earl of Shannon, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Prime Serjeant, Mr. Attorney General, and Mr. Serjeant Dennis had, both in public and in private, taken every method by themselves and by their friends to defeat the measure. (862.)

10th May.—The Lord Lieutenant proposed that a dissolution should take place immediately ; as, after the Royal assent was given to the Octennial Bill, the candidates had been almost totally employed in soliciting votes and interest. Considerable sums had been lavished, to the great encouragement of idleness and riot, amongst the common people. (871.)

In a second long letter of the same date he sent three lists to show how the members voted, that the King might know how many of his principal servants, and those peculiarly indebted to his goodness, had ventured to support the interest and ambition of a few individuals. His Excellency says he is more than ever of opinion that the absolute disposal of the several offices of the revenue, subject to the control of the Treasury in England, should be placed in his hands. He is the more confirmed in that opinion from the great weight some of the Commissioners have been able to exert over several members who are officers under them. Asks if there are not some in the different branches of the services who ought to be marked out as particular objects of His Majesty's displeasure. On the other hand, there are men of the first abilities, integrity, and property, who have supported the Government, who can be recommended to His Majesty as servants to carry on the public business with safety and credit. (872.) Is anxious that the Earl of Tyrone, and his brother Mr. John Beresford, and others, should have some mark of the Royal favour. (pp. 335, 336.)

1768. 14th May.—The Earl of Shelburne writes expressing His Majesty's approval of his Excellency's zeal and endeavours, and takes it for granted that his Excellency will prorogue the Parliament in order to a dissolution. (880.)

The Judges' Bill was rejected by the Irish House of Commons on 13th May, on account of the additions made in Great Britain. (881.)

17th May.—The Lord Lieutenant was apprehensive of interference in the elections by Irish priests, who were in some credit in France, and who had set out from thence. (887.)

31st May.—The Lord Lieutenant says that this is now the crisis of the Irish Government. If a system is at this time wisely formed and steadily pursued, His Majesty's affairs may hereafter be carried on with ease, with dignity, and safety. But if only a few changes are made, and this particular man raised, and another depressed, possibly to be restored in a few months with double power and weight, as in 1755, it will only add fuel to the fire, and at last bring the King's authority in Ireland, low as it is, into still greater contempt. His Excellency again presses the carrying out of the recommendations he made on the 10th inst. He expresses a desire, if a better plan should be suggested, which His Majesty would wish to be carried on by other hands, to be recalled from his government. (906.)

12th July.—As a little change from the more troublesome business of his government, the Lord Lieutenant, with the sanction of His Majesty, made a tour in the southern parts of Ireland to acquire a further knowledge of the military state of the kingdom. (949, 980.)

2nd Oct.—The new Parliament was prorogued from time to time, "long prorogations being for the ease and benefit of the subject." The first prorogation "which would be very acceptable to the people in general" (1003), was to 20th June 1769, and was followed by successive prorogations to 22nd Aug. (1208), and 17th Oct. (1264). 1768.

2nd Nov.—The Lord Lieutenant recommended certain members of Parliament who had supported the Government to be advanced to the peerage of Ireland, to show that the support of the Crown was to be obtained by honourable service, and not through the recommendations of servants who, holding the first offices and emoluments, had accustomed themselves to expect that they were to extend their respective followings, whilst they distressed and defeated the most salutary measures of Government. (1023.)

9th June 1769.—After lying in abeyance for several months, the questions which had agitated the King's Government on the one side, and the Parliament and people of Ireland on the other, came up again, and Lord Weymouth writes to the Lord Lieutenant that he shall have every support in the administration of the affairs in Ireland; for, though the picture drawn by his Excellency is extremely unpromising, and the case seems desperate, yet, from another part of his Excellency's letter, he does not seem to despair of a majority. Instead of general support of the Government measures, his Excellency was directed to be satisfied with an explicit declaration on two points from members, viz., as to the Money Bill and the Augmentation, which the King was as anxious as ever to have carried. (1224.) 1769.

24th June.—The letter of the 24th of June is in reply to the above. An alphabetical list of the members accompanied it, with a description of how they were disposed, and by whom they were influenced. It was thought by no means improbable that the business of the Crown might be carried on without the support of the Duke of 1769. Leinster and the principal servants of the Crown. His Excellency says, however, he cannot confer separately with each individual. Those who are doubtful may be brought to support Government, and many who are under the influence of Mr. Ponsonby and Mr. Loftus will, if Government keep its hand shut against those who oppose themselves, quit connexions from which they will derive no advantages. As to the Money Bill, which was granted to supply the deficiency of the hereditary revenue, there is not the smallest foundation to imagine it will be refused; and in regard to the augmentation the generality of the kingdom acknowledge the necessity of it. Those who stood by the Government, and are still ready to do so, should have all the marks of favour which the Government has to bestow, before those who, without any provocation, have, by all means in their power, involved it in difficulty and distress. His Excellency adds as a post-script, that he was about to set out immediately to finish a view he had previously begun, of the southern parts of Ireland, in order to make a general report of the deplorable state of military affairs of the kingdom, and to suggest remedies. (1233.)

6th July.—His Excellency could not think but that the Government would have a full share of the doubtful list of 63, exclusive of those persons of great personal abilities who would be secured to Government if the situations he proposed were opened to them. (1244.)

8th July.—In Lord Weymouth's letter in answer to that of the 24th of June, he says that it is not His Majesty's pleasure that any of his servants who shall obstruct his reasonable views shall remain in their present situations; but should they, on mature deliberation, give his Excellency reason to expect that he shall not be dissatisfied with their conduct, other opportunities must be found as soon as possible for providing for some of the most eminent of the gentlemen who so honourably supported Government during the last sessions. By His Majesty's express permission his Excellency is to contradict the idle report that he is to be removed. (1248.)

17th Aug.—His Excellency writes that whenever he shall be empowered to dispose of the revenue employments, as mentioned in his most secret despatch of 21st April, the augmentation may be carried in opposition to all those alliances which defeated it in the last Parliament. In a friendly conference with the Duke of Leinster on the same subject, his Grace would not make any engagement in regard to this measure. His Excellency says it would be endless to go over the various propositions which have been started on this most important matter. There are some who think this a proper occasion for acquiring to the Irish Parliament the right of voting their own army every session, as is now done in the British Parliament; nor can any man say what new ideas may be sported in these times, unless Government be put upon a firmer footing. As for finding other opportunities for providing for the friends of Government, its favours have been anticipated to such a degree by grants of employments for life, and in reversion for life, and by filling others with double names, that he (the Lord Lieutenant) has hardly anything to dispose of, however pressing the occasion may be for the better carrying on His Majesty's business; whilst, by the variety of valuable places which the first Commissioner of the Revenue is allowed to give away, his influence is universally diffused, and operates every hour in every part of the kingdom. He reiterates his proposal, contained in a despatch to the Duke of Grafton of the 21st April (not among these papers), for the immediate transfer to himself from the Board of Revenue of the disposal of the places specified in that despatch; viz., to remove, before the meeting of Parliament, Lord Shannon, Lord Lanesborough, and Mr. Ponsonby, and to substitute the Earl of Drogheda to the Ordnance, and Sir Wm. Osborne and Mr. Beresford to the Board of Revenue, and to empower him (the Lord Lieutenant) to promise to Mr. Flood the next vacant seat at that Board, and to make the other removals and promotions therein mentioned, at his own discretion, and at his own time. Nothing could be so fatal to His Majesty's service as that his affairs should be suffered to relapse into the same precarious and subordinate situation in which they stood the last session; and there was no one who might not meet the ensuing Parliament with a better prospect than himself, if he were not only to lose the confidence, but to expect the reproaches of the former friends of Government. To enlarge the ground of Government, and to recover its vigour and authority, had been his first and great object. It depended upon English Government to pursue and confirm this system, but, until this should be done, the Lord Lieutenant was a mere pageant of State. (1268.)

In another letter of the same date his Excellency mentions that he had received in the most cordial manner the fullest assurances of support from Mr. Tisdall, the Attorney General, without stipulation for himself or others. This would also secure the support of two others, who, in the alphabetical list, were put down as against the Government. Mr. Ponsonby had been very active to keep his old friends steady and acquire new ones, but had only gained two relatives. "These are a people ever ready to make all the advantages they can of Government for their own purposes, at the same time that they abide by the factions of their own country,—a game which they have often played with the greatest success at the expense of English Government." Did not recollect a single person of any consequence in the neighbourhood of Dublin whom he had not discoursed with, and endeavoured to gain, save only Mr. Prime Serjeant. Thought he would be best secured by seeing Sir William Osborne and Mr. Flood received into His Majesty's service. If his recommendations were adopted the strength of the Government would be established on a very honourable footing. (p. 492.)

6th Sept.—The Lord Lieutenant was informed that it was intended that he should have the powers which he desired over the Revenue employments, and that the changes which he proposed to make in the Ordnance and Revenue Boards would be approved. (1279.)

13th Sept.—The Lord Lieutenant was again on a tour, and wrote a long letter, in which he says that he found the people in general well convinced of the expediency of the much debated measure. He enclosed two addresses to show how ineffectual every attempt had been to prejudice the people against the Government. Lord Shannon and Mr. Ponsonby still continued their opposition; but it was the power they derived from the Crown and exercised so largely over the kingdom, which subjected the minds of the people to them; and there was good reason to suppose that neither of them could preserve even their common provincial influence without their offices. He says that the Octennial Bill gave the first blow to the dominion of aristocracy in Ireland. It rested with the Government to re-establish its own authority by disarming those who had turned against it. (1283.)

11th Oct.—The long asked for assurance was given from His Majesty to the Lord Lieutenant that 12,000 men should always be kept in Ireland; and if the augmentation could not be carried without, its security was to be guaranteed by a clause in an Irish Act. (1310.)

17th Oct.—Although by this time the Lord Lieutenant must have received the letter of 6th Sept., he seemed to be under the impression that he had not yet obtained the power of removal of those whom he was most anxious to dismiss, and so things remained as they were. (1314.)

22nd Oct.—He again writes submitting modes of carrying the augmentation. His Majesty's servants proposed a message from the King under his sign manual; whilst the Prime Serjeant, on the other hand, advised a message from the Lord Lieutenant, and a security given in an Irish Act. These were great constitutional points, and the Lord Lieutenant desired directions. And he again earnestly recommends that those who had exerted themselves in the last session should have some distinguishing marks of His Majesty's goodness. He says he waits with a good deal of impatience for some decision relative to the Revenue employments. (1321.)

24th Oct.—Lord Weymouth writes that the powers over the Revenue appointments have been granted in the terms which his Excellency desired, and that after this very explicit declaration he is at a loss to understand the cause of his Excellency's hesitation. (1324.)

1st Nov.—Lord Weymouth transmitted the sign manual as the means for carrying forward the augmentation; but he says that the plan of the message from the Lord Lieutenant might be adopted if his Excellency preferred it. His Majesty observed that if it were ever proper to distinguish in a very particular manner those who supported Government from those who opposed it, it was at this juncture. His Majesty considered that the augmentation, with the security of 12,000 men kept in Ireland, was a measure of obvious national utility, and he could not suppose but that a majority of the gentlemen of property in Ireland, who consulted their own interest and the public good, must be for the measure. The peerages asked for on the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th of the previous November were granted to the gentlemen named, and these favours were to be connected as much as possible with the question of the augmentation. (1333.)

About 15th Nov.—On a meeting of the King's servants the Prime Serjeant's plan was adopted. A motion to take into consideration the number of forces to be maintained within the kingdom had been carried against the Government by a majority of thirty. Lord Shannon and the Speaker would give the Lord Lieutenant no answer as to whether they would support the plan. The Duke of Leinster in pretty plain terms expressed his disapprobation of any augmentation whatsoever. (1344.)

21st Nov.—A short Money Bill was the occasion of a trial of strength between the Government and the Opposition. The latter moved that it should be totally rejected, and this was carried by 94 to 71; and they resolved that it was rejected because it did not take its rise in the House of Commons. The Lord Lieutenant says, these extraordinary proceedings are not to be paralleled in the history of the country from the year 1496, the era of Poyning's law, down to the present time, except in 1692 under the government of Lord Sydney, when the House of Commons determined the same question exactly in the same manner. Their conduct at that time was judged so unwarrantable, and so contrary to that constitutional dependence in which Ireland then stood and still stands to England, that three days after their rejection of the short Money Bill Lord Sydney prorogued the Parliament for six months. He (the Lord Lieutenant) cannot advise His Majesty whether to prorogue, dissolve, or continue this Parliament. Their conduct hitherto has pretty well unmasked their real sentiments, and shown they mean to 1769. acknowledge as little as possible the superiority of the mother country.

The Duke of Leinster declared his hostility to everything either coming from or connected with the present Administration in England; and when the Lord Lieutenant sent for Lord Shannon and Mr. Ponsonby to consult them, they begged to be excused from coming to Dublin Castle, because their attendance there had occasioned many reports injurious to their reputation. The Lord Lieutenant further says that the constant plan of these men of power was to possess the government of this country, and to lower the authority of English government, which must in the end destroy that dependence which this kingdom had on Great Britain. (1347.)

30th Nov.—In consequence of the above, the English Government were unanimously of opinion that His Majesty should direct his Excellency to prorogue the Parliament for two or three months, and, that as in the year 1692, the Lord Lieutenant should enter his protest. (1357.)

8th Dec.—His Excellency discusses the possibility of maintaining the civil and military establishments out of the hereditary revenue alone, and postpones the prorogation until he hears further. (1368.)

11th Dec. — Upon a consultation with the King's servants they expressed the greatest concern at the situation into which the proceedings of the 21st of November had flung His Majesty's affairs and the country, and thought if the protest were entered it ought to be immediately followed by a prorogation; for if the House were allowed to meet again it would break out into all manner of excesses. They also urged the insufficiency of the hereditary revenue to support the expenses of Government, and said everything they could to prevent the experiment from being tried. For these reasons his Excellency put off the protest. (1371.) 1769.

23rd Dec.—The Lord Lieutenant in a very long letter recommends that Mr. Pensonby and Lord Lanesborough should be superseded, and that John Beresford, Esq., and Sir William Osborne, Bart., should replace them. Mr. Beresford was brother to the Earl of Tyrone, and Sir William Osborne was a very able member of Parliament, and had a good knowledge of Revenue matters. One or two members of the Board of Revenue should be Englishmen resident in Ireland, and regularly bred in the Revenue of England;—men in whom the English Government could confide, for discharging their duty themselves, for preventing others from abusing theirs, and for acting entirely with the Chief Governor. He also recommended that Lord Shannon, the Master General of the Ordnance, should be removed, and replaced by Lord Drogheda; and that Mr. Staples should be one of the Commissioners of the Barrack Board, in the room of Lord Loftus, who had attacked the Government with ingratitude and insolence. Mr. Staples had been a strenuous supporter of the augmentation. The letter also proposes many other similar changes, remarking that it is a common trick in this kingdom for people, the moment they have obtained a good thing from Government through one Lord Lieutenant, to take the earliest occasion of quitting Parliament under his successor; by which means the intention of obliging them is defeated, and the influence of the Government is as enfeebled as it is at this period. He further remarks that the principal share of the power and influence of those parties in Ireland, which had so long embarrassed Government, was owing to the favour as well as the forbearance of the Crown, under which they had been cherished, &c. (1391.)

1769. 23rd Dec.—The Opposition snatched a victory over the Government on a motion for an address to the Lord Lieutenant to inform the House whether he had any instructions to prorogue the Parliament sooner than usual. On the question of adjourning the debate upon the Lord Lieutenant's reply to this motion, however, the Government beat the Opposition by 114 to 99, notwithstanding the utmost exertions of the great powers, viz., the Duke of Leinster, Mr. Ponsonby, Lord Shannon, Lord Lanesborough, and Lord Loftus. (1392.)

26th Dec.—The Lord Lieutenant announces that he has given the Royal assent to the two Money Bills, has made a speech to both Houses, has ordered his protest to be entered on the journals of the House of Peers, and has prorogued the Parliament till 20th March. He also mentions that the augmentation is carried, and all that is commonly called the King's business is finally settled. (1393.)

31st Dec.—With a letter of his Excellency at the close of the volume, announcing that nothing new had happened since the prorogation, this notice of the first portion of the administration of Lord Townshend may very appropriately terminate. (1398.)

Morocco.

The relations of this country with the Emperor of Morocco were, as in many previous periods, very unsatisfactory; and amongst the causes for this there were three: (1) the crew of the ship "Pitt," which had been cast away near Cape Bajador, were imprisoned; (2) Mr. Popham, His Majesty's Consul at Tetuan, had been ill treated; and (3) the treaty regulations with regard to exports were not observed by the Emperor.

Commodore Spry says (on 26th Aug. 1766) that he was invested with full powers to treat with the Emperor, and was anxious to prevent an ambassador being sent from the latter to England. In order to avoid going himself to the Court at Mequinez, he wrote to the Emperor, and sent the letter by Mr. Popham, the Consul, who was then at Gibraltar. The Commodore hoped in this way to settle everything satisfactorily. (255.) The Commodore on 13th Dec. gives an account of the result of his negotiations with Sidi Abdallah Bumelsoe, a man of great weight and influence, who was authorised to treat on the part of the Emperor, and was attended by Samuel Sumbel, a Jew, who was much in the esteem of the Emperor, and was his Secretary of State for European affairs. The first two articles were secured without altercation, but the third they refused to grant, as they alleged that the Emperor had an undoubted right to establish what regulations he pleased in his own dominions ; this, however, the Commodore also obtained by a threat of leaving, and by some money and presents well disposed. He further says that he had effectually destroyed the monopoly which the Spaniards had been endeavouring to accomplish, and had amply provided for the refreshment of His Majesty's ships ; and lastly, that he had destroyed the private agreement between the Spaniards and the Emperor as to the export of cattle. This, he feared, had cost 1,000*l*. (352.)

16th Jan. 1767.—In the Commodore's interview with Mr. Sumbel the latter said he could as easily set aside the Spanish treaty as take a pinch of snuff. He complained that though he had often been a friend to the English, they had never taken the least notice of him, whilst the Spaniards were very liberal. A Spanish ambassador was every hour expected, who would bring great presents in order to set a finishing hand to the treaties ; and Sumbel intimated that he could be of service in these affairs. Of this the Commodore was very sensible, and promised if he would have a regard to British interests he should be men-

1767. tioned to the Principal Secretary of State. Sumbel thereupon undertook to take care of English interests. The Commodore further states that the Spanish ambassador to the Court of Morocco was carrying thither a present of 140,000 hard dollars, including a velvet tent embroidered with gold. The Commodore was anxious to make a handsome present to Sumbel if he disclosed the secrets of this negotiation. He was convinced that a little occasional bullying would have more weight with that Court than all the Spanish presents. (407.) No business could be carried on with the Moors but by bribes, and if the Commodore had been obliged to go to the Emperor's court at Mequinez, 3,000*l.* would scarcely have defrayed the expenses. (420.)

1768. 31st March 1768.—A convention had been concluded between the Moors and Spaniards, which, in the opinion of the Commodore, could by no means be advantageous to us, and he would gladly embrace an opportunity of setting them at variance again. (824.)

In July 1768 affairs in Morocco were again in an unsatisfactory state, and the Earl of Shelburne was apprehensive that the Emperor's cruisers might molest the British trade. Commodore Spry was again charged with the duty of explaining matters to that Prince. He was to urge that it could not be to the Emperor's interest to break off the constant intercourse between Gibraltar and his dominions, in consequence of any new engagements he might have entered into with a power which had for ages been the enemy of his nation. (960.)

The Dey of Algiers objected to supply Gibraltar, lest he should give umbrage to the Emperor of Morocco; but Commodore Spry says the Moors were so sensible of their weakness, and dreaded a naval force so much, that, rather than suffer a single shell to be thrown into their town, they would oblige the Dey to settle matters amicably, or depose him. (996.)

12th Nov.—The Commodore had written to the Emperor and to his Minister for European affairs, and apologises to the Earl of Shelburne for his letters which he says will require his utmost indulgence, as he has been bred a seaman, and is little used to correspondence without the limits of his own profession. He hopes, however, that things will be restored to their former footing, but, if not, promises to answer for little damage being done to His Majesty's trading subjects, provided he has an addition of two or three sailing frigates. The shutting up of the communication between Gibraltar and the Emperor's dominions arose from an additional duty of 25 per cent. on exports to Gibraltar, in contravention of a treaty of two years before. The Commodore says in his communication to the Emperor, that he flatters himself that the Emperor will not suffer our enemies to gain their ends by persuading him to distress Gibraltar, under the supposition that it may one day fall into their hands. Not all the Powers in the Mediterranean combined, will be able to wrest it from the King his master, while His Majesty's fleets command the sea. (1030.)

The Commodore on 28th Nov. encloses the Emperor's reply, in which he says that men of sense would have sent a great man of our nation to treat with him, when the matter might have been settled. "Letters are only toys for children. If the Consul was good for anything, he might have settled it; but, poor simple man that he is, he is fit for nothing but to amass the salary he receives from the King, and to serve his own family purposes, &c." He asks, what would the world think if he gave way, and suffered vessels to load according to the former rule, &c. He demanded payment of 9,000 Mexican dollars, and con-

1769. formity with the additional duties, &c., or the giving up of a person engaged in contraband trade. (1041.)

The application for the addition of the three sailing frigates was responded to on 27th Jan. 1769, by an order for two frigates of 32 guns, and two sloops of 14 guns each, for the service required. The Commodore's conduct was approved, together with that of the Governor of Gibraltar (Lieut.-General Cornwallis). (1120.)

2nd March.—Mr. Popham, His Majesty's Consul at Tetuan, had been put in prison, and when released proceeded to Gibraltar, from whence Commodore Spry wrote to the Emperor, complaining of the indignity. In his letter to Lord Weymouth he asks for instructions on this flagrant violation of treaties. He further says it is very plain that his Imperial Majesty wants a person from England to be sent to him with a present; which would, doubtless, reconcile all differences for some time; but it is certain no reliance can be placed on so capricious and avaricious a Prince. (1125.)

On the 7th of March Lord Weymouth informed the Commodore of the reinforcements sent out, and in his instructions left it pretty much to the discretion of the Commodore whether it should be peace or war with the Emperor; but he said a rupture with the Emperor was to be avoided, if possible, and recommended the utmost temper and calmness in all his proceedings, to make the strictest inquiry into complaints, &c. (1133.)

The Consul was by no means to return from Gibraltar till proper satisfaction was made. (1147.)

The Commodore intended immediately (11th April 1769) to proceed to the port of Mogador, from whence he would despatch Sir Jacob Wheate, one of his lieutenants, to the Emperor's Court. Was of opinion that it would bring the Emperor to temper and moderation, and would settle matters. If this failed he would blockade their ports. (1165.) Sir Jacob Wheate was received at Mogador by the Alcaide or Governor with the highest marks of distinction and friendship, but was not suffered to proceed on his journey till the Emperor had been informed of his arrival. There was every reason to hope that all difficulties would vanish. (1194.) These hopes were fulfilled, for the Commodore writes on 22nd May that Sir Jacob had executed his commission to the Emperor entirely to his (the Commodore's) satisfaction, and his Imperial Majesty had reopened all the ports and restored things to their former footing. (1203.) The Commodore writes on 7th June more particularly how these matters had been settled. The Emperor had apologised for confining the Consul, and had returned him double the amount which was asked; and on our side the smuggler was to be banished from Gibraltar. Sir Jacob Wheate was despatched to England to lay before the King the subjects of the conversations he had had with Muley Idris, who was very instrumental in reconciling these differences. (1223.) But on the return of Consul Popham to Tetuan, although he was well received, further complications arose about the supply of provisions to the King's ships. (1225.)

In June 1769 Captain Charles Proby was appointed to relieve Commodore Spry in the command of H.M.'s ships in the Mediterranean (1232), but the Emperor having assembled a force at Tangiers, and thus given rise to some suspicion, Commodore Spry was still keeping a watch over the cruisers, not knowing what their destination might be. (1265, 1271, 1280.)

Further letters show how difficult it was to keep satisfactory relations with the Emperor. Mr. Adams, writing to the Commodore, says he had been ten years in Barbary, 1769. and had seen almost every nation at variance with him, one after another, and every one at last had been obliged to come to his terms. From these letters it would seem that the Emperor had then no immediate intention of breaking with His Majesty. (1296, 1297.)

The Alcaide of Tangier, by orders of the Emperor, again refused towards the end of 1769, to let British men-of-war have anything without paying duty, not even a drink of water, and they were to be considered his worst friends. The Vice-Consul was about to send away all British vessels, whether laden or not, whilst the Spanish men-of-war were to have everything they wanted, duty free, and without paying anything. (1326.)

Commodore Spry's affairs with Morocco finish by his asking for payment of his account. (1360, 1365.)

North America.

It will be seen by resorting to the Index how many references there are to North American affairs. At the commencement of rebellion against the mother country, tumults arose at Boston, Rhode Island, &c. It was apprehended (3rd Jan. 1766) that when the stamped paper arrived at New England it would only be safe on board the King's ships; and the Governor of Massachusetts Bay expected that the violent proceedings of the House of Assembly, and the increasing licentiousness of the people, would oblige him to quit the government. The distributor of stamps for the province of Maryland was forced by the violence of the mob to flee to New York; and Governor Franklin requested that if the stamps for the Jerseys arrived at New York they should be put on board the King's ships, the fort there being full of men and military stores. A ship arriving in the Delaware River, with stamped paper for Pennsylvania and Maryland, was received by the vessels with ensigns half mast high, or with the Union downwards. (4.) Virginia was also in a state of tumult, and if the military were called upon to act civil war was apprehended. (27.) The people of New York were quieted by the declaration of the Governor, Sir Henry Moore, that he would not meddle with the stamped papers. (41.) Major-General Gage, the Commander-in-chief of the forces in America, expressed his sorrow at not receiving any requisition from the civil magistracy for military aid, as the disturbances had been so much beyond riots, and so much like the forerunners of open rebellion, that he wanted a pretence to draw the troops together. (83.) Riotous proceedings continued to prevail, and at New York, &c. stamped papers were burnt, and any one who dared to purchase a stamped paper was threatened with destruction, and this by people calling themselves the respectable populace. (84.) It is, perhaps, unnecessary here to go further into the progress of events than to refer the reader to the correspondence of the Earl of Shelburne with Major-General Gage, the Commander-in-chief, which shows the repressive measures resorted to, proposals for quartering troops, management of the Indians, &c. The conduct of these affairs by the Commander-in-chief received His Majesty's approbation. One of the most important letters on these matters is numbered 348.

The Crown had taken possession of the Isle of Man, Isle of Man. as was mentioned in the last volume. Governor Wood details his proceedings in relation to the new acquisition. He sends an important letter on 28th Jan. 1766, giving the nature of the revenue, and other interesting particulars. He was anxious to ascertain the extent of the rights of the Crown, as well as what he was to give up to the Duke of Athol. (30.)

great concern. (76, 96.) The Major was blamed by the Secretary-at-War, who directed him to make a proper submission to the Governor, but the latter was instructed to give all orders to the troops through the Major. (133.) The Governor replies that he never had given any orders relative to the troops but through the Commanding Officer. (140.) In addition to the Governor's other troubles, he had not received a farthing salary, nor funds for any service whatever, from the 17th May 1765, when the Island was vested in the Crown, till 14th Aug. 1766, and all the public entertainments formerly allowed by the late Lords Proprietors had been defrayed at his own expense. (116, 245.)

The inhabitants complained much of want of employment, and sent a deputation to London to represent their grievances. The best remedy the Governor could suggest was the promotion of agriculture and manufactures, and he started a society for that purpose, called "the Manx Society." (125.) As the Governor had been informed that the deputation were making representations to the Treasury as to the manner in which the government of the Island was conducted, he took the opportunity to relate how he had carried out his duties,—and makes the very satisfactory statement that there had been no felons. He said he had no funds, but he would pay charges out of his own pocket rather than suffer the public business to be interrupted. (183.) A very unsatisfactory appointment the Governor must have had, for, after having filled it for fourteen months, he takes the liberty, on 28th Aug. 1766, of asking what his appointments are worth, in order that, if he cannot have his salary at present, he may regulate his expenses and form his plans accordingly. (258.) He had not yet obtained a settlement on 10th Oct. 1767. (573.) In one of his letters he mentions a scheme to annex the Island to the county of Cumberland, which was causing the greatest consternation. (441.) In September 1768, the Governor's salary and that of the Attorney General had been settled, and the Governor made proposals for the salaries of other officials likewise to be fixed. His letter gives in addition information as to the duties, &c. of the officers. (1000.)

The Governor on 8th Feb. 1769 forwarded a petition of the "Keys of the Isle," with his warmest recommendation. The principal gentlemen and merchants had had a meeting to promote a scheme for the repeal of certain restrictive clauses in the late Acts relative to the Island. The people were most loyally attached to His Majesty's person and government both in Church and State, although rents had fallen in the trading towns. The merchants were asking that the Island should be put on the same footing as Ireland. (1116.)

A series of letters, &c. from 9th Oct. to 3rd Dec. 1769, relating to the riots in Jersey, the people having caught the epidemic for riot which was then raging, is fully described between pp. 528 and 533. The mob forced the Lieut. Governor and other officials to pass some extraordinary Acts, highly derogatory to His Majesty's authority,—keeping them confined in the Courthouse for five hours, in continual apprehension of falling a sacrifice to the fury of the multitude. (1361.)

The spirit of disaffection fostered by John Wilkes culminated in very serious riots in the year 1768, and these engaged the most anxious attention of the Government. Sir John Fielding, Chairman of the General Quarter Sessions of Westminster, fell under the blame of Lord Weymouth, for not having rendered assistance against the riotous mob on the night of the illumination on the occasion of the election of Wilkes as member for Middlesex, and was asked for an explanation of his conduct. Sir John replied that he had done everything in his power to preserve peace and good order. (830.) As a precautionary measure the Duke of Northumberland submitted to the Secretaries of State whether it might not be expedient that the arms belonging to the Middlesex militia, deposited in places of little security, should be removed to the Tower. (840.)

The letters in the Domestic Entry Book, vol. 25, between pp. 54 and 159, detail the measures taken against the riotous proceedings which occurred upon the election, arrest, trial, and imprisonment of Wilkes. The abstract of them contains a minute narrative of the proceedings in London, Westminster, and Southwark at this very critical time, running over the three months which ended on 30th June 1768. (936.) The riots of the sailors and the coal-heavers are also alluded to in this correspondence. (pp. 356-7.) The magistrates during this harassing time were sometimes cautioned, sometimes commended, sometimes blamed; but they probably made the best arrangements in their power under such trying circumstances. In regard to the rescue of Wilkes, Lord Weymouth declined to exculpate them, until he had reasons for changing his opinion (p. 359); but, in the end, Sir John Fielding, and the magistrates who had acted with him, all received his Lordship's hearty thanks. (p. 361.)

in London.

In addition to riots in connection with John Wilkes, others by sailors about their wages took place in May 1768. The spirit of dissatisfaction manifested in the North showed itself also in London, where the sailors unmanned the ships, and disabled them from going to sea. (866, 869, 870, 874, 894, 940.) The rate of wages demanded by the sailors was 37*s.* a month. (978.) The Hudson's Bay Company complied with the still higher demands of their crews for 40s. per month, and the ships proceeded on their voyages. (899.) The coal-meters were threatened by the coal-heavers if they should assist in doing sailor's work. (902, 903.) Sir John Fielding considered that the coal-heavers laboured under some grievances which required to be redressed by Parliament. (924.) Certain of them were executed at Shadwell in July. (959.)

To add to the disturbances in London, the tailors in May 1768 were endeavouring to compel their fellow journeymen to join them in obliging the trade to raise their wages, and Lord Weymouth was very earnest with the Lord Mayor and Sir John Fielding to prevent their rising. (883.) Though they were unable to prevent a meeting, which took place in Lincoln's Inn Fields, yet they persuaded them to send a deputation of six persons only with their petition to the House of Commons. (884.)

The persons charged with the outrages in Spitalfields in Sept. 1769 were prosecuted by the Government. (1302, 1303.) The outrages were perpetrated by weavers, or, as they were called, "cutters," from their practice of cutting the looms. They seem to have been in combination with journeymen weavers in Dublin. (1317.) On the question of the place of execution of two of these cutters, who, it was proposed, should be put to death in Spitalfields, where the outrages were committed, there was quite a correspondence. It arose because there had been no order of the Court for their execution in an unusual place, as was the case with the coal-heavers. (1356.)

A collection of letters, &c., from 28th Sept. to 18th Dec. 1769, relative to the proceedings of these cutters or "banditti," and to the steps taken by the magistrates and others for their suppression, is described under No. 1352.

Riots at Newcastle.

In the spring of the year 1768 riots of sailors and others occurred at Newcastle, and the measures taken to assist the magistrates are alluded to in letters numbered 837, 839.

Appre-
in Kent.

In Kent also, in the month of May 1768, the poor people were incited to raise a mob to force the farmers to sell their wheat to the millers, or to poor people, at 10*l.* a load, and the millers were threatened with destruction of their mills if they paid more. (896.)

other places.

There were also riots in the county of Oxford, more particularly at Oxford and Woodstock, on account of the high price of wheat and provisions, (285,) and at Leicester, Gloucester, and Nottingham (300).

British workman.

In the last volume Mr. Samuel Garbett occupied a prominent position in regard to measures for restriction of imports in the iron trade; and in this volume there are various letters written by him, complaining of the import of iron in its manufactured state from Sweden and Russia, and also of the seduction of workmen to foreign countries. He states that although he had succeeded in a trial of some offenders, the punishment was in a great degree evaded. (82.) Much information is afforded in papers numbered 112 and 312, as to the importation of plate-iron, chiefly from Sweden by the Carron Company, with which Mr. Garbett was connected.

Mr. Garbett's opinion was that some one was sorely needed, who was intelligent, and who had enlarged views, to take the lead in considering our commerce as a subject of politics. He says he would be heartily glad if Mr. W. Burke were a member of the legislature, to lend a steady hand to the protection of manufactures, and the establishment of commerce. (134.) He further wanted a committee of the House of Commons appointed to consider the state of British manufactures for exportation. (320.) The success of the English workmen at Gothenburg was still a vexation to him (134), and he would fain have had them outlawed if they did not return (309). The law was brought to bear upon one of his apprentices, who was in prison at Edinburgh (203), for his intention of going abroad to forward foreign ironworks. Mr. Secretary Conway, under a pressure that had been put on him, writes to the Lord Advocate to have the laws on this subject stringently enforced. (222.) The Lord Advocate sends his reply on 16th Aug. 1766. (251.) He mentions the Acts which regulate these matters, the bail to be taken, &c., and says that he had written to the sheriffs to apprehend any persons concerned in the seduction of artificers. Additional steps were taken in respect to these runaway artificers, the Attorney General's opinion being asked as to whether they had brought themselves under the law. The influence of the chaplain at Gothenburg also was exerted, and he elicited from them that they could make more money there, and did not care for the outlawry. Kennaway, who was one of them, accused the Carron Company of villanies on their part, and of employing British subjects improperly in foreign countries. (414.)

The care of the Government was further exerted that the British workman should not carry his skill abroad in the steps taken to break up the manufacture of iron and steel in Holland. (107.)

The miners in Cornwall were also under surveillance lest they should go off to Portugal, where a mine had been discovered. (1267.)

The subject of the sale of army commissions is illustrated by the copies of various printed letters described under No. 45. The highest priced commission for the first lieut.-colonelcy of the first and second troop of missions.

Horse Guards was estimated at 5,500*l*. Other values are also given, and the letter numbered 85 is on the same subject.

The Ogilvie case.

The sequel to the Ogilvie case, alluded to in the former Preface, will be found in the letter numbered 89, where the particulars are given of the escape of Mrs. Ogilvie from her prison at Edinburgh. She was to have received sentence of death on the following Monday, but she made her escape in male attire, and with four horses distanced her pursuer.

An Infidel Ambassador.

The question of the reception and entertainment at Court of an Infidel Ambassador is discussed, and as a question of law was referred to the Attorney General. (226, 229.)

Strange petition of a convict.

A convict condemned to die desires that the laws may not be broken by his being transported, death being all he requires. (244.)

Trade in the East.

The state of trade and commerce in the East is much illustrated by divers copies of reports transmitted by the Board of Trade to the Earl of Shelburne, numbered 264.

Pardon of criminal on condition of losing a limb.

John Benham, under sentence of death for housebreaking, has a pardon granted to him, on condition of having a limb amputated, in order to try the styptic medicines discovered by Mr. Thomas Pierce (510.)

Request of pardon for criminals.

Mr. Humphrey Morice, M.P. for Launceston, was most anxious about the pardon of two criminals, apparently not so much for the criminals' sake as to stand upon good terms with the electors, it being the eve of a general election. One of them was reprieved by the Judge, and the people were more than ever anxious that the other should be saved. (548, 551.) His Majesty, however, did not see fit to comply with their wishes, as it had been his invariable rule to pay the greatest regard to the opinion of the Judges, and in this case the Judge's opinion was adverse to a pardon. (564.)

Various papers relating to Lieutenant James Cook, the great circumnavigator, are noticed under 24th April 1768. He was then complaining of the ill-treatment he had received from the Portuguese Viceroy at Rio-de-Janeiro. (1174.)

Lieutenant Cook.

Lord Weymouth sent a circular to various foreign ministers, instructing them to communicate such articles of foreign intelligence or news as might appear proper to be inserted in the London Gazette, as the writer of that paper had complained that the reputation of his paper was greatly lessened, and the sale diminished, by the small portion of foreign news supplied. (1245.)

Contributions for the London Gazette.

It only remains to the Editor to acknowledge his great indebtedness to R. A. Roberts, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of this Department, for his valuable assistance in the preparation of the volume. The abstracts have been made by him, as well as the Index, and he has largely helped in carrying the whole through the press.

3. MONS. ROUBAUD to "[WILLIAM] BURKE, Esq., Under Secretary of State for Southern Province, at General Conway's, in Privy Garden, at London."

The decree for his destruction is pronounced. Never was man so unfortunate as himself. Mr. Larpent is in error in saying that the voyage to Holland by the packet only costs a shilling. It costs more than two guineas, without provisions. Captains of the packet, when charitable enough, sometimes give beggars a free passage, but no one would do so for a man like himself. Came to Dover, having been told that it was the starting-place of the packet for Holland. Finds now that it goes from Harwich (Eragé). Is obliged, therefore, to return to London, where he will arrive without a penny. Makes no demand, having no right to do so; but asks, as he came to London by order of General Murray, and with the consent of the Jesuits, whether that Society cannot be compelled to pay for his support. In some Catholic countries he would but have to apply to a magistrate, and an order would immediately be issued to the Jesuits to pay for his support. When once he found a subsistence, would work for England, and for her willingly sacrifice his blood. Alludes to his devotion for Mr. Conway. Now waits for release from his position through the Jesuits, one of whose number he is, being compelled to support him.—Dover. (French.) 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ pp.

4. The LORDS OF THE ADMIRALTY TO MR. SECRETARY CONWAY.

Sending copies of letters from Rear Admiral Lord Colvill, Commander-in-Chief of H.M.'s ships in North America, giving an account of the proceedings of himself and some of the captains under his command, in respect to some tumultuous transactions at Boston, Rhode Island, &c., on account of the stamps; and also of a correspondence that passed on the subject between Governor Ward at Rhode Island, and Captain Leslie, of the "Cygnet" frigate.

The enclosures:—

(No. 52 b.) Lord Colvill says that Governor Bernard was apprehensive it would be necessary for the stamped paper, when it arrived for New England, to be secured on board the King's ships, except what was intended for Boston. The "Viper" should be sent for a short time to Boston until the present tumults should subside.

(No. 52 c.) Again he says, Governor Bernard, of the Massachusetts Bay, informed him that he was apprehensive the violent proceedings of the House of Assembly, and the increasing licentiousness of the people, would oblige him to quit the government or at least the town of Boston, before the winter. As it was impossible to foresee what turn the affairs of his government would take, Captain Wallace was to receive his Excellency and family, and proceed with them to Spithead if all other expedients failed. If the Governor was not forced to quit his government he wished that it might not be known that he had had any such thoughts. Mr. Zachary Hood, distributor of stamps for the province of Maryland, had acquainted him (Lord Colvill) that the violence of the mob had forced him to fly to New York, and he had desired that a sloop might lie off Annapolis for the security of the stamps then daily expected. An application had been made that in case the stamps for the Jerseys arrived at New York they should be lodged in the fort, but the fort was full of men and military stores. Governor Franklin had therefore requested that the stamps might be put on board the King's ships. He presumed these riotous proceedings with regard to the Stamp Act were regularly sent home by the officers.

(No. 52 d.) When the ship with the stamped paper for the provinces of Pennsylvania and Maryland arrived in the River Delaware, the "Sardoine" attended her up to Philadelphia. As soon as they "opened" the harbour, all the vessels in it either hoisted their ensigns half mast up, or spread them in the topmast shrouds with the Union downwards. The merchants wanted the ships to go alongside the wharf, and to land the stamps as common merchandize, in order that it might be destroyed. Since the 31st [of October] the people had been extremely riotous.

(No. 52 e.) This is a correspondence between Capt. Leslie and Governor Ward, arising from a rumoured attempt to be made by the inhabitants of Newport on the fort at Newport, Rhode Island, in order to turn the guns of the fort on the "Cygnet" in case it should endeavour to protect a sloop, on which an attempt was also to be made by armed boats. This rumour the Governor treats as idle. But the Captain, in his reply, reiterates his belief in its truthfulness. The town had been in the possession of a mob for four days, led by a vagabond named Crandall. In his letter to Lord Colvill he says, "They seem to be determined, and I verily believe will burn the stamp paper when it arrives, without it is put on board the 'Cygnet.'" 18 pages or parts of pages.

5. The LORDS OF THE TREASURY to MR. SECRETARY CONWAY.

In answer to the memorial of Prince Ferdinand, claiming repayment of money said to have been advanced to the British Commissariat by Mr. Meinecke, the Hanoverian field cashier, out of the chest of contributions in Germany, which advances are stated to have been made mostly without any order or note from Baron Behr. The memorial further states that the Hanoverian Chancery of War could not repay these advances to the Prince because their demands for the same had been disallowed in part by the Commissioners for German Demands.

These advances were not made to the English Commissariat, as alleged, but to the Hanoverian Chancery of War; and it is, not pretended that the British Treasury or Commissariat ever directed the Hanoverian Chancery to borrow these sums or any other from the said chest. Contributions of forage and provisions and money levied in Germany during the late war were at the sole disposal of his Serene Highness, and never subject to the care, custody, or control of the British Commissariat. These same sums, now demanded, were claimed at the office of the Commissioners of German Demands by the agent for the Electorate of Hanover, as expenses defrayed by the Chancery of War for the use of the combined army. The second and third of these claims were allowed, but the first and fourth were examined, according to the general instructions, and upon the same principles which have been applied to other German demands already liquidated.

Everything has been allowed to the Hanoverian Chancery which the Commissioners had a right to allow. If claims not founded on the authority of the British Commissariat, nor supported by proper vouchers, were now to be met, it would be contrary to rule, and unjust to those whose claims have been already liquidated. His Serene Highness's demand remains on the Chancery of War only, and the disallowance of the articles of expenditure of these sums by no means alters the claim of Prince Ferdinand as the original lender upon the said Chancery, to whom the advances were confessedly made, and that without any intervention of the British Treasury or Commissariat.

The enclosure is entered on pp. 154-6; to which there is this note: "That the humanity showed to Capt. Martinet may not be construed as a precedent for other persons in future to claim indemnifications in this way for goods they may be plundered of, it is necessary to observe that no part of this sum was granted by the King as an indemnification, but merely as a mark of His Majesty's generosity to the Captain, and in compassion to his personal sufferings."

officers of different foot regiments for permission to enlist such of the discharged men as shall be thought fit for, and be willing to enter again into, His Majesty's service. But as, by His Majesty's express commands, no Irishman can be enlisted into the infantry in Ireland, and as almost the whole of the artillery regiment are Irishmen, he has deferred giving an answer to these applications. The foot regiments here are very low in numbers, and the parties sent to Great Britain to recruit have met with little success. The men who are to be discharged from the artillery regiment are said to be very fine men and extremely well disciplined. It will be for the good of the service if His Majesty will dispense with the order against enlisting Irishmen on this particular occasion.—Dublin Castle. 2 pp.

The Lords of Trade communicated the same to the principal London merchants interested in the commerce of those parts, who have represented in return that the measures taken by the Emperor for opening this new channel of commerce have been so far from producing any advantage or encouragement to British merchants that they have been attended with very great oppression and discouragement, and have compelled them to establish a house, at a very great expense, at this new port of Mogador, the situation of which they represent to be inconvenient and disadvantageous to the trade in the articles of export and import of that commerce, and which articles are, in consequence of this measure, loaded with double duties at Santa Cruz, where the trade has been long established.—Whitehall. 1½ pp.

Isle of Man,
v. 1, No. 29 a, b.

30. GOVERNOR OF THE ISLE OF MAN (WOOD) to the DUKE OF GRAFTON.

In order that his Grace may be fully informed of the nature and particulars of the revenue of this Isle, it appears to him not improper to transmit a general state of it, and to lay before his Grace some other particulars which will necessarily fall soon under consideration, as the time is approaching when the Duke of Athol's rents and revenues are to be settled and collected. As he, the Governor, holds every right to which the Crown has any appearance of title, His Majesty's pleasure directing which he is to retain, and which to give up to the Duke of Athol, may be necessary. By the Act passed the last Sessions of Parliament relative to this Isle, all fairs, fair days, markets, &c., are specifically reserved to the Duke of Athol. The construction and extent of this power may be worth considering. Cannot help observing that if the Duke has the power of appointing fairs and fair days, thousands may assemble, under pretence of a fair, at the will of a steward, from which in critical times bad consequences may be apprehended. Besides, it is expressly contradictory to the law and constitution of the Isle, which vests that power in the Governor only. All chapels and the rights of presentation thereto are also reserved. There is a chapel in this town for the use of the Government and garrison. The Lords Proprietors always paid the chaplain his stipend. His Majesty's pleasure in this particular may also become necessary. By the same Act all the messuages, houses, gardens, &c., are in like manner reserved; and, by what he can learn, the Duke claims the house, out-offices, gardens, and other accommodations, which he and all the preceding governors of this Isle immemorially have enjoyed rent free.

As he looked on the fairs to be a prerogative of the sovereignty, has, as His Majesty's Governor, taken the only opportunity that offered of appointing a fair, and still holds possession of the chapel, governor's house, gardens, &c., judging them to be comprehended under the article of public buildings mentioned in the instructions. Although no one on behalf of the Duke has as yet claimed them, he nevertheless desires directions in order to be prepared for such an event. Has just now received his Grace's letters of 10th and 14th inst. The peace officers have ever acted by commissions from the Governor: submits the propriety and continuance of it to his Grace's consideration.—Castletown.

"The Articles of the Revenue of the Isle of Man, with explanations." They are the following, to which some of the explanations are here added:—

Land farm.—Fee-farm or quit rents payable by the landowners to the Lords of the Isle out of land of every denomination; to wit, quarter-land, particles, intacks, and cottages.

Boon services.—By original tenure every possessor of a quarter-land pays annually "four carriages" (or four days service of men and labour of horses), and one day of the like service out of every intack and cottage. Ever since the Act of Settlement, anno 1703, and the Explanatory Act of the year following, the Governors have had the sole application of these services, and these boons were never brought into account as an article of the revenue.

Mill-farm and freshwater fishing.—Rents certain, payable for the privilege of converting the rivers, &c., and having certain tenements "bound to suit and soaked," at the several mills, 14 of which also pay annually a hog each.

Brass and lead farm.—Rents arising out of brewing coppers or pans provided by the Lords, and farmed at small rents assessed upon houses.

The Moar's office and the Coroner's office.—These officers were annual, and paid a certain fine or composition for their offices.

The Sumner (i.e. Summoner) General's Office.—Analogous to that of an apparator, held by lease for 21 years, at commencement of which a fine is paid.

Fines and amercements, spiritual fines.—Imposed by the several courts for contempt, &c.

Pinfold fines.—A penny a piece for cattle found trespassing and put into the pinfold, paid to the Lords, besides the trespass to the injured. The Governor ever licensed the erection of these pinfolds. "Quere, is this power continued?"

Alienation fines.—Paid, by stipulation of the said Act of Settlement, to the Lords, out of every tenement, on death or alienation of each landowner.

For pardoning felons.—This produced nothing for ages past.

Felons' goods.

Freedom of aliens.—Fines on enfranchisement (a prerogative of the Lords) of persons of a nation in amity with England.

Waifs and strays.—Beasts which have strayed a year and a day.

Forfeitures.

Treasure trove, deodands, wrecks of the sea.—"Require no explanation."

Mines.

Customs of ingates and outgates.—Duties payable on importation and exportation; the duty on exportation of flags was abrogated in 1736.

Herring customs.—The native pays for each boat ("if 5,000 fish, or upwards, are caught in the season") ten shillings; the stranger, double. But the Whitehaven Chamber, after the first year, pleaded the charter of the British White Herring Fishery and certain Acts of Parliament, and refused paying the Lords for their "busses."

Seizures.

Perquisites in Chancery.

Abbey spiritualities.

Abbey temporalities.

Demesnes "set" to the Governor at a low rent.

Rents from certain houses, cellars, &c.

Embassy, giving notice that the French Ambassador would not authenticate any acts, deeds, or writings, but such as were passed before Messrs. Benjamin Bonnet and Abraham Ogier, public notaries, whose handwritings were well known to his Excellency.

The want of authentication by his Excellency of notarial acts does not make them invalid generally abroad, but only in France, if the courts there require such countersigning, in which case parties concerned cannot in prudence avoid complying with such regulations; nor can any person oblige his Excellency to subscribe his name to the attestation of any notary but such as he knows and approves; nor is he liable to any civil action here on account of damages sustained by such refusal as may be in consequence of the laws or regulations of France, or of policy in his instructions. But, if thereby the interests of British subjects are affected, or the facilities of trade checked, or commercial law or usage of nations contravened, it may be an object of complaint to the Court of France. But Ministers making their countersigning a necessary authentication is indirectly contrary to the national authority, which commissions the drawers of such public instruments, for it superinduces the necessity of a foreign authority over a national one. 1½ pp.

38. The SAME to the SAME.

Sending an extract from a letter from Major-Gen. Gage, and copies of two papers enclosed therein.

The enclosures,—being the extract, dated from New York; a letter from Gen. Gage to Governor Moore; and resolutions of the Assembly of New York, of 13th Dec. 1765. They relate to an application made to the Assembly, in accordance with the new Mutiny Act for North America, for raising the expense of quartering the troops. The Assembly resolved, 1st, that when H.M.'s forces were quartered in barracks belonging to the King, they were always provided with the required necessaries, without any expense to the countries in which they were quartered. And, 2nd, therefore, that as there were barracks belonging to His Majesty in New York and in the city of Albany, sufficient to accommodate double the number of forces contained in the return laid before the Assembly, an application to them appeared altogether unnecessary. Also, 3rd, that the expenses of troops passing through the province ought to be considered after such expense was incurred.

Gen. Gage explains that the King's barracks referred to were some buildings in Albany built by the Crown during the war, and others built long back in New York at the expense of the province, and constantly repaired at their expense, but the situation of which, either in the fort or under its protection, they made a pretence of to call King's barracks. The Act had been reprinted there; and he, Gen. Gage, had never heard any clause complained of but that which subjected the provinces to furnish the soldiers with beer, cider, and rum in barracks, barns, &c.,—some pretending that this was an extraordinary imposition on America, not laid elsewhere.

War Office,
pcl. 24, No. 2.45. SALE OF COMMISSIONS IN THE ARMY.

Printed copies of letters relating to the sale of commissions, viz., reference to the Judge Advocate General, 3 Oct. 1765, and report of the Board of General Officers as to the prices, dated 31 Jan.; a letter to Charles Gould, Esq., from Lord Barrington, asking for information as to what principles the report is founded on, and the reply; another letter from Lord Barrington to the same, dated 8 Feb.; and the general order issued to the army, 10 Feb., in consequence of the report.

In cavalry regiments, the highest-priced commission, the first lieutenant-colonelcy of the First and Second Troop of Horse Guards, was estimated at 5,500*l.*; the lowest, a lieutenant-colonelcy in the Dragoon Guards or Dragoons, at 4,700*l.* (including the amounts paid at each step). A cornet in the latter regiments paid 1,000*l.* for his commission; in the former 1,200*l.*; and in the Horse 1,600*l.* A lieutenant-colonelcy of Foot Guards was valued at 6,700*l.*, and of a marching regiment at 3,500*l.*; ensigncies in the same at 900*l.* and 400*l.* respectively.

Mr. Gould states that the Board, in fixing the prices, proceeded on the general principle of considering the value of the pay and rank distinctly, and, after fixing what appeared a reasonable price for commissions of cornet and ensign in the respective corps, of proceeding to estimate every increase of pay after the rate of 100*l.* for each shilling per diem, in a general view, not attending minutely to fractional sums; and, in the next place, they endeavoured to fix a certain proportionate value on each advancement in rank, such as might, if possible be extended to all the different corps.

Lord Barrington, in his letter of Feb. 8, after signifying His Majesty's approval of the report, and stating that it would be adopted, proceeds to detail the reasons why an officer who had not bought his commission was not, under any circumstances, to be permitted to sell, the consequence of such permission being that the men who came into the army with the warmest dispositions to the service, whose business became their pleasure, who distinguished themselves on every occasion that offered, were kept all their lives in the lowest ranks because they were poor. It concludes, "It frequently happens in the army, as elsewhere, that want of money is also accompanied by a want of assisting friends; but the poor tho' deserving officer should always find at the War Office a constant assertor of his rights, and faithful guardian of his interests." 13 pp. of print.

Ireland,
v. 430,
No. 44 a to m.49. MR. SECRETARY CONWAY to the LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND.

Encloses a copy of the report of the Lords of Trade upon the memorial of the Irish refiners of sugar. A draft (a).

The letter (b) of the Lords of Trade to Mr. Conway, enclosing the said report or representation (c). It appears to them that the complaint on the part of the Irish sugar refiners has not a solid foundation; and that the advantages which they have from receiving the raw sugars free from that duty which is paid by the British refiners, together with the diminution of the bounty from 12s. to 6s. 4d. upon the exportation of the inferior specie of the British refinery, do carry with them every encouragement that can be reasonably desired. At the same time their Lordships would not propose that the case of the Irish refiners should be concluded, and the matter decided upon the evidence of these papers, seeing that the arguments on both sides have reference to, and depend upon, a variety of facts not in the least proved. Hence, they called upon the Commissioners of Customs in England and Ireland for accounts of the imports and exports of sugar, which might furnish such a state of the trade as, together with the facts and informations which should arise out of an examination of the several parties interested, might enable them to form a clear opinion upon the whole. But as no returns have yet been received, and the examination of parties will take up a great deal of time, they submit whether it will not be most advisable that the further consideration of this business should be postponed, and all proceedings superseded, until the next session of Parliament.

(d.) Mr. C. Lowndes's letter from the Treasury to John Pownall, Esq., for the Lords of Trade to make a report on the memorial; and (e) Mr. J. C. Roberts's letter to Mr. Lowndes, asking him to lay the same memorial before the Lords of the Treasury.

(f.) The Earl of Hertford's letter to [Mr. Conway], enclosing and commenting upon the memorial and other papers (g, h, i). He says he is persuaded that it was not an object of the British Parliament to discourage the refining of sugars in Ireland.

[For the contents of the memorial see Vol. I. of the Home Office Calendar, No. 2038.]

Also (j.) "An impartial state of the case between the refiners of sugar in Great Britain and those of Ireland"; (k.) "Case of the English sugar refiners"; (l.) "Remark of the sugar refiners of London on the case of the Irish sugar refiners"; and (m.) "Objections from Bristol to the Irish state of the sugar refiners."

The Irish refiners state (44 j.) that all sugars must come through Great Britain into Ireland, and therefore they have to buy from the Irish importer, who must have a profit, and who is obliged to buy at the British market; and they specify other disadvantages under which they labour. Then the English refiner has an unlimited export, and can always choose a favourable market. The Irish refiner is absolutely confined for his sale to the consumption of Ireland alone, without any power of export, as no bounty is allowed, but even a duty imposed on exportation. The policy of Great Britain has been, and continues to be, to prevent all importation of refined sugar into their kingdom, by laying a duty on it there.

The English refiners (44 k.) in reply, show that, after all, the Irish refiners have an advantage of 9 per cent. They say (44 l.) that the latter set out with a supposition extremely wide of the truth, in supposing that 2 cwt. of raw sugar will produce 1 cwt. of lumps or loaves. The British refiner requires 3 cwt. of raw to produce that amount of loaf, and the remainder is converted into bastard sugar or molasses, or thrown away as dirt. "The producing so large a quantity of lump or loaf sugar from 2 cwt. of raw is a degree of skill in manufacturing to which the British refiners do not pretend; but, on the contrary, utterly disclaim and deny. The British refiners leave this alternative to the option of the Irish, either to admit their case not to be strictly impartial, or to allow that they manufacture to much greater advantage than the British refiner. If they insist on the latter, the British refiners apprehend that, instead of discouragement, they stand in need of further assistance to enable them to contend with the superior skill of the Irish." As the quantity of bastard sugar produced from 3 cwt. of raw is nearly equal to the quantity of lump, and, being cheaper, is more used by the poor, the Irish refiners will be considerable gainers in that article, as the exclusion of all rivals must tend to enhance the price of it. The cheapness of provisions, and of articles employed in the process of refining, as well as the low price of labour, are also advantages enjoyed by them.

The Bristol refiners (44 m.) in their reply further state that many of the Irish import their own sugar, and all may if they like; and if they do not, it is more equitable that they should pay for their folly than that the English should be taxed for it. The laying in a large stock at once is a hardship that every English refiner who has money and warehouse room is glad to submit to, it being almost an invariable rule that raw sugars are cheaper at their first importation than at any other period of the year. The regard that ought to be paid to the representation of the melancholy state of the sugar-refining trade in Scotland (sic, for Ireland) may be ascertained from the following undoubted fact. The number of sugar houses in that kingdom is more than double within these twenty years, which is a sufficient proof of the hardships they labour under. The English refiners, notwithstanding that the Irish have an advantage of 9 per cent. over them, by their superior application, or being contented with a more moderate profit, enjoy a small share of the trade, and they hope that it will not violently be forced from them by the imposition of a tax; more especially as they are now rendering an essential service to the consumers in Ireland, by preventing their refiners from exacting an unreasonable price for their goods; a memorable instance of which lately happened; for by the arrival of refined sugars from England they have been obliged to lower their lumps (which were at a most exorbitant price) seven or eight shillings per hundred. "It is not, therefore, surprising that they should be angry, and endeavour to make up with invective what they want in argument. Their assertion that the English refiners want to destroy their trade is as well founded as their calculation, and as their late accusation against the English refiners for making their lumps of scum and trash." 41 pp. or parts of pages.

Sending a copy of a letter from the Commander-in-chief of H.M.'s ships in North America, representing that great inconveniences arise to the service from the large number of rum retailers at Halifax, by which the seamen are drawn into drunkenness, and then enticed to desert, and that it is impossible to put a stop to this practice while these retailers are licensed by the Governor; asking that the evil may be suppressed.

The enclosure.

The Commander-in-chief says drunkenness was remarkably prevalent with the lower class of people. The most severe corporal punishment that he ever knew had been inflicted on the criminal sailors; even six and seven hundred lashes had been given. The sailors attributed their crimes to drunkenness. 6 pp.

73. WILLIAM BURKE to MR. DELAVAL.

Will with great pleasure introduce his friend, Mr. Irwin, to General Conway, and be glad to be useful to him. The man he, Mr. Burke, formerly mentioned is still here, shifting and doing nothing.

Encloses, by direction of General Conway, a Moorish letter, which our interpreter cannot make out. It is meant as a sort of trial of the skill of a Mr. Uri, formerly recommended by Sir J. Yorke to Lord Sandwich. There is a plan on foot to provide elsewhere for the present interpreter; and General Conway, always attentive to Sir Joseph Yorke, means to make Uri his successor, if he is capable of the office, and continues honoured with Sir Joseph's good opinion. Sends also a paper which contains the several languages of which it seems the Moorish letters are composed. Supposes they should more properly be styled dialects than languages; but, indeed, it is a kind of thing of which he has so little understanding, or even comprehension, that it would be impertinent in him to make any supposition; but Uri will know how that is, and it may be material that it should be ascertained whether his knowledge runs through this variety.—St. James's.

Dom. Misc., pcl. 136.75. PRINCE FERDINAND to CAPT. LUTTERLOH, London.

Returns the injurious and surprising report of the Commissioners delivered to the Treasury on the 11th of November last past, concerning the Britannic Legion; and in answer thereto sends a memorial, signed by himself, and dated Brunswick, the 7th of March, to be delivered in original, with an English translation, to the Lords of the Treasury. Sends likewise a sealed writing for Mr. Secretary Conway, to be presented to him with the Prince's best respects, and a true translation of the memorial, that he may take an opportunity, in case it should be necessary, to report it to H's Majesty. For Captain Lutterloh's own information, has enclosed a copy of a letter from Col. d'Estorff to him, the Prince, and another from his Adjutant to the High Seneschal of Westphalia, as there are many circumstances contained therein which serve to clear and justify the case.—Magdeburg.

Annexed is a copy of Capt. Lutterloh's memorial to the Treasury, delivered Oct. 16, 1765, on the subject of Prince Ferdinand's demands. It states that Meinecke, to whom the Hanoverian Chancery had entrusted the contribution chest, advanced money, without the knowledge of his Serene Highness, for purposes within the department of the British Commissariat. By these advances the chest was so exhausted that his Serene Highness was compelled not only to advance money to the chest out of his own private cash, but also to borrow from his brother, the reigning Duke of Brunswick, and from the Langrave of Hesse Cassel, upon assignation given of his own hand upon the said chest. The Commission settled at Minden for the revision and liquidation of the account of the contribution chest was dissolved before the Crown of Great Britain had settled these advances made by Meinecke; and the accounts were transferred to Hanover, and tendered to the Office of Control by one Schmidt, assistant cashier of the said chest. But before the certificate and warrant could be obtained, this office was likewise dissolved. But the Hanoverian Chancery of War took care to give special order to their agent in London to deliver into the office for German demands the account of these advances of the contribution chest as a just demand on the Crown of Great Britain.

Also a translation of the Prince's "memorial in which the objections of the Commissioners concerning the Britannick Legion, as contained in their report of the 11th Nov. 1765, are answered and refuted."

He states that at a time when the Crown of England would have been glad to have taken foreign troops into its service if they could have been got, rather than pay subsidies, he applied himself to the raising of this considerable corps, chiefly out of the occupied provinces, and to form them in a short time, even before the opening of the campaign of 1760. The calculation made by General Freytag did not include extraordinary expenses, such as keeping men, horses, &c. in a condition fit for service. As nobody could suspect his Serene Highness of seeking advantage to himself from this business, it would be very hard and singular if the Treasury, instead of paying what had been expended for the service of the Britannic legion, should free themselves by appealing to General Freytag's estimate, and treat the Prince like a forage contractor. The memorial then enters into particulars; and at the end are two lists,—one a state of the monthly maintenance of the Britannic legion, the other a state of the monthly economy for one battalion of the same, according to the settled allowance. 22 pp.

76. GOVERNOR OF THE ISLE OF MAN (WOOD) to the [DUKE OF GRAFTON].

As there has happened an affair which gives him great concern, this letter is sent by a Liverpool pilot boat, the packet not being as yet arrived. Has made it his constant study to cultivate a perfect friendship and good understanding with the troops, and succeeded to his wishes while Col. Raitt was at the head of his regiment. But upon his going to London for a few months, the command devolved upon Major Pennington, a young gentleman to whom he (Mr. Wood) had shown every kind of civility. His conduct has often been such as could not be passed over, unless he, the Major, had made such concessions as most people in the like circumstances would gladly have done. Considering his youth, his Excellency was unwilling to proceed to extremities, and therefore called the captains together to hold a court of inquiry, judging that method might bring him to a sense of his duty. When the captains were assembled, and had the articles of accusation delivered to them, they begged half an hour's respite (before sitting) that they might have a conversation with Major Pennington upon the affair. This was readily granted, but all to no purpose. The court sat, the Major made his defence, and the report made is, that Major Pennington's conduct was both unmilitary and unbecoming. So unwilling still is Mr. Wood to take any step which might lessen his rank in the esteem of the people, that he will await the arrival of Lieut.-Col. Raitt, who is hourly expected; and if then under the necessity of proceeding to extremities, the whole proceedings shall be laid before his Grace. —Castletown. 3 pp.

82. SAMUEL GARBETT to WM. BURKE, Esq.

Alludes to a letter from Mr. Sykes, of Hull, upon the subject of the increasing quantity of plate iron imported from Sweden, which will soon be practised by Russia. Iron has been lately brought from Russia also, in part formed for ship-bolts, &c.; and unless the spirit of the law is soon executed to prevent the importation of iron in any other form than common bars, in another year there will be many dexterous evasions of the law, by which the revenue as well as manufacturers will be considerably injured. Indeed, he will be forced "to do it" in self-defence; and when the Russians have felt the advantage of the trade, their Minister will probably remonstrate against restraining it. An eminent Russian house, in consequence of the application to the Custom House officers, acquainted him, in confidence, that he was losing his time, for that his design would probably be opposed by the Russian Minister.

Is under great obligation for the letter which was written to the Lord Advocate of Scotland upon the prosecutions of the seducers of workmen to foreign countries. Had the good luck to succeed on the trial, though the punishment of the offenders is in a great degree evaded by the inconsiderable bail taken; which, however, is said to be for as great a sum as the law would admit of. Has the ill-luck to meet with an opposition before Parliament to the amending an Act for a turnpike road in so important a line as the nearest passage by land between the German and Western Oceans, and by which the price of carriage will be reduced one third of the present rate. There are at present two roads in different lines, about 29 and 24 miles long respectively; but the latter, by some infatuation, has been made over such hills as to render it impracticable for a cheap conveyance; whereas, if the tract (sic) was altered in some places about a mile at most from the present line, there would be a practicable and easy road whereby a thousand per annum for carriage would be saved. He applied last year to the gentlemen of the country and to the city of Glasgow, and at a numerous meeting at Glasgow it was resolved that a view should be taken of the "premises" by some gentlemen of considerable fortune whom he attended. They unanimously condemned the present tract, and approved the alteration he proposed, and made a report to a numerous general meeting accordingly, which was entered into their books. There were several general meetings afterwards by public notice, at every one of which the alteration was approved; and at last it was determined, at his expense, (which he offered,) to apply to Parliament for power to make the alteration. And now it is opposed, particularly by Mr. Campbell of Shawfield, under the pretence of injuring the tolls of the longest road. This pretence would have been more plausible if the Act now applied for had been quite a new plan, instead of a more effectual execution of one already passed. Mr. Edmonstone and Lord Fr. Campbell, as members for the county and Glasgow respectively, have the conduct of the Bill. Though they behave very genteelly to them (the Carron Company), yet the latter's connexions are so inconsiderable in Scotland that, however apparently it may be for the public good, he fears for the fate of it. Encloses another copy of Mr. Sykes's letter.

The enclosure. Mr. Sykes thought plate iron was within the spirit of the Act. He suggested that in case of a new Act it ought to extend to all iron about 5 inches broad; the demand for iron of 7, 8, and 9 inches broad, which was entirely calculated for English uses, having increased tenfold in ten years. These broad sizes were of the same metal as the common sizes, and were only dearer on account of the extraordinary degree of labour spent upon them. He says he was speaking against his own interest, which, however, he never had and never would wish to see promoted against that of his country. Russian iron ought to be included in any exclusion of this kind, as he foresaw that in a few years more iron would be imported from thence than from Sweden. He also suggests that perhaps an order from the Commissioners of Customs to the collectors at every port to inform the importers that no iron above 5 inches would be allowed to be imported but as manufactured iron might be sufficient. This should be done at once, and then he himself (being the largest importer of Swedish iron in the kingdom out of London) would venture to import none.

The enclosures. The Major General expresses his sorrow that no requisition for the aid of the military from the civil magistrates has been made to him, as the disturbances which have happened have been so much beyond riots, and so like the fore-runners of open rebellion, that he has wanted a pretence to draw the troops together from every post they could be taken from, that the servants of the Crown might be enabled to make a stand in some spot if matters should be brought to the extremities that may not without reason be apprehended. He has been the more anxious in this affair as, from the distance of the troops and the season of the year, it would require a considerable time before a respectable force could be assembled; and if the requisition from the civil power is postponed till sudden emergencies, it will not be in his power to give the assistance required.

84. LORDS OF THE ADMIRALTY to the SAME.

Sending copies of two letters from Capt. Antrobus, of H.M.S. "Maidstone," giving an account of the riotous proceedings of the people at Rhode Island, as well on account of a seizure he had made of a vessel concerned in an illicit trade, as of the late Stamp Act.

The enclosures, with copy of the correspondence that took place between Governor Ward and Capt. Antrobus and his lieutenants in consequence of an attack made by a mob on one of the "Maidstone's" boats which had taken the second lieutenant ashore, and which the mob carried through a part of the town and then burnt. The second lieutenant was afterwards attacked, and was supposed only to have escaped being murdered through the intervention of two gentlemen passing. The Governor and magistrates at the time of the riot were all "not at home," and Capt. Antrobus complains that he was not able to get any redress. The report was that the cause of the outrage was the impressment of some men belonging to the colony; but Capt. Antrobus thinks it was entirely owing to the seizure made by him. Out of the impressment a dispute arose between the Governor and Capt. Antrobus, the former claiming jurisdiction over the King's ships in harbour, and the latter repudiating his claim. An account is also given of a merchant who, at the head of 40 or 50 men, endeavoured to prevent the merchant who contracted for the victualling of the King's ships from sending some provisions on board. Complaint was made to the Governor, but no notice taken of it. In short, (from the confused state this colony particularly is in,) no one need expect any redress of these licentious acts, the magistracy being composed of a very ignorant and turbulent set of people, and being rather the planners and countenancers of these riotous measures than supporters and protectors of regular government. Many of the delinquents, being the electors of their Governor, &c., carry their audacity to such a height as at times to say, "If attempts are made to bring them to justice, he shall not be Governor, or they in the magistracy, in the ensuing year."

Capt. Antrobus's second letter, dated 29th Jan. 1766, gives an account of the burning of stamped paper at New York, &c. In New England any one who dares to purchase a stamped paper is threatened in the public newspapers with destruction by a set of people calling themselves "the respectable populace," not composed wholly of the lower class of people. 38 pp. or parts of pages.

Has received advice from Edinburgh that Mrs. Ogilvie, who some months ago was convicted of incest and poisoning her husband, made her escape from prison, but her escape was not discovered or known to the magistrates till the day after. This has happened by the corruption or connivance of the under-keeper. The magistrates made a thorough search of the city, and the Lord Justice Clerk immediately despatched a messenger to trace and overtake her on the London road. But he was too late, and only discovered that a young gentleman, very thin and sickly, muffled up in his big coat, and attended by a servant, had passed through Haddington on Saturday at midnight, and had pushed on with four horses day and night from stage to stage to Durham, where he desisted from the pursuit. This answers to the time of her escape and the state of her person, for she had been delivered of a child in prison about three weeks before, and was to have received sentence of death on the Monday after her escape. 96. ISLE OF MAN.

"Letter from Govr. Wood, of the 29th March, missing."

The enclosures. They consist of a correspondence between the Governor, Major Pennington, and Mr. Charles Lutwidge, who was at the head of the Revenue Department, relative to the sending of troops to Peel, where a "very abusive and seditious disposition among the inhabitants" had arisen, which broke out in an attack upon a soldier, who, as he was passing quietly down the street, received a most violent blow on the head from a stone. Mr. Lutwidge desired to have an officer and six light horse sent, but the Governor (34 g.) (for the reason that "it would not be possible to get forage and 'stabling' for seven dragoons, and that there is neither hay nor oats to be had there," and also on account of the additional expense) (34 c.), ordered a company of foot to march there, or such part of a company as should be thought sufficient, as soon as the weather and roads (which were impassable for the depth of snow) would permit. Mr. Lutwidge (34 h.) objected to sending a company of foot, as he considered the application for light horse the most proper, also because when a company of foot had been sent from Douglas there would not remain there more than 30 serviceable men besides 10 light horse; and as it was the most central port, and had always been the mart of the illicit trade, and was the place where the greatest quantity of high duty goods were then lodged, and as the inhabitants were nearly equal in number to the three other principal towns, he thought the troops then there were barely sufficient, especially if the service of the revenue should require a sudden detachment to the northern parts of the Island, which it was very probable might become requisite. This necessity, Mr. Lutwidge, in a postscript of the 13th Feb., stated, had occurred. Being at the head of the revenue, he claimed, also, the right to judge what troops were necessary for such particular service, the Lords of the Treasury having thought him the proper person to consult what troops were sufficient to protect and secure the officers of the revenue in the Island. This claim the Governor repudiated, (34 h. dorse.) adhering to his original resolution. These letters are dated the 12th, 13th, and 17th of Feb.

Out of these circumstances arose the "misunderstanding" between the Governor and Major Pennington, which resulted in the court of inquiry of the captains mentioned in the Governor's letter of the 11th March (No. 33), and which held several sittings. A detailed account of these proceedings, the Governor's charges, the Major's justification, the examination of witnesses, &c., form another part of the enclosures (34 j, &c.). It appears that Major Pennington only ordered four men and a corporal to Peel, for the reason that Lieut. Shaw, who was quartered there, had represented that the company he then had was in a miserable situation,—fasting, nay, starving,—the deep snows that had fallen having prevented the usual supply of bread getting to him. Capt. Barker, one of the officers at Douglas, was ordered by the Major to take the command at Peel; which order, though he complied with it, he complained of, as it was out of his turn to go on such duty, and no part of his company was stationed at Peel, but the whole at Douglas, where his wife and family also were. A conversation took place between the Governor and Major Pennington, in the presence of Capt. Barker and Ensign Ellison, in which Mr. Wood charged the Major with conduct "unmilitary and unbecoming." The greater part of the examinations and justification relate to this conversation, in which the Governor got very hot and angry, but Major Pennington remained "perfectly cool." The court of inquiry were of opinion that, in not having reported to the Governor his proceedings, Major Pennington's conduct was "unmilitary," and that, in regard to one circumstance which took place during the conversation, it was "very improper and unbecoming."

The enclosures also include the "Governor's remarks on the report of the court of inquiry;" a statement of "several unbecoming remarks made use of by the Major in public court, and not inserted in the proceedings;" and a letter (34 m.) from Captain Barker to the Governor, with the vindication enclosed in it, in reply to an insinuation which Major Pennington made in his justification against the Captain, of a "confederacy, a private manner of conveying and managing" an order of the Governor's. Capt. Barker desired that this vindication might be sent with any account of the proceedings transmitted to England, and stated that he had the greatest reason to believe that it was merely out of pique that Major Pennington ordered him out of his turn, away from his company and from his family.

There is also (34 o.) a "memo. relating to papers sent to Mr. D'Oyly, Apl. 10, 1766," which are the above-described enclosures; and a letter from Major Pennington to the Governor, dated Douglas, March 26th (34 i.) stating that he had received orders from the Secretary-at-War to hold the two troops of light dragoons in readiness to embark for Ireland. 46 pages or parts of pages, most of large size and closely written.

Encloses a memorial received from Catherine Countess Dowager Tyrone, representing that in 1764 she exhibited her claim to the barony of Le Poer, as lineal and rightful heir of Nicholas le Poer, who was summoned to the Parliament of Ireland as a baron by writ in the 48th year of Edward III., and afterwards in the reign of King Richard II., and died seised of the honour and dignity to him and his heirs; that the Earl of Northumberland, then Lord Lieutenant of this kingdom, referred the consideration of the claim to H.M.'s Attorney and Solicitor General here, who reported their opinion that the memorialist had proved her title to the barony; and that the report, as the memorialist has been informed, was transmitted to the Earl of Northumberland to be laid before His Majesty, but that his Lordship having soon after been removed from this Government, no further proceedings were taken. Asks that the King would make an order thereon.—Dublin Castle.

The enclosures, being the extracts dated from New York, the first relating to the disposition of the troops. He proposes to abandon as many of the posts as shall be advisable, and bring all the force he can into the inhabited country, though the great distance, and the obligation of waiting till the lakes and rivers are free of ice, will not permit the troops being drawn from the upper country as early as could be wished. The second relates to and encloses the answer of the magistrates of Albany to a requisition for quarters for H.M.'s troops, in conformity with the Mutiny Act passed for America. To prosecute the magistrates according to the tenor of the Act will avail very little should they be cast in the penalty of 5*l.*, and even that would be of very little consequence. He must at present yield to the temper of the times, but will not acquiesce in these refusals the moment it is in his power to do otherwise with any prospect of redress. 4 pp.

Letters, &c. relating to Edward Cator, a native of Banbury, and John Hill, who were employed in establishing a manufacture abroad. About six or eight months before this time, Cator took Hill, an expert artificer in the iron and steel manufacture, and particularly in the making of coach springs, over to Holland, where they established workshops, &c. at a place called Rhoon-in-the-Overmaasel, near Rotterdam, of which place Count Benting had the lordship (18 c). Other information (18 d) states that Hill was at Cator's works, "Op de Overtoonse Weg," out of the Linden Gate, about 1½ miles from Amsterdam. Cator, on returning to engage more workmen, was apprehended when on the point of departure (18 a). It was requested that Sir Joseph Yorke at the Hague might be applied to to take steps to compel Hill to return (18 a), so that the manufacture might be entirely broken up. Sir Joseph Yorke was accordingly written to on April 8th (Indorsement). The papers are—

Whether the said King William afterwards committed the charge of his affairs to the Marquis D'Arzilliers, who resided there in like manner without any public character? Whether King George I. likewise consented that the Sr. Desrolles (whom he appointed his Resident at Geneva in 1715) should not present his credential letter, but should, nevertheless, have charge of the King's affairs without being qualified as Minister? 112. GREY COOPER to the SAME.

Sends, for the information of Mr. Secretary Conway, by order of the Lords of the Treasury, a copy of a report of the Commissioners of the Customs on a letter from Mr. Garbett, of Birmingham, concerning the fraudulent importation of iron.

The enclosure. On inquiry, Mr. Garbett appears to be a considerable manufacturer of iron and iron wares, and to be principally concerned in carrying on the iron-works in North Britain known as the Carron Company. Some time since the Company's agents in London, Messrs. Adam and Wiggan, memorialised them, setting forth that a species of iron imported (chiefly from Sweden) in plates from 20 to 70 inches long, and from 9 to 30 inches broad, was suffered to pass at the Custom-house under the denomination of unwrought iron, though they were wrought by the hammer at near ten times the expense, and a waste of 10 per cent. more than the making iron into bars, whereby the revenue was deprived of the duty in such waste, and the nation of the advantage of the labour; that the manufacturing the said plates was attended with five times the expense of manufacturing rod iron or iron drawn or hammered less than $\frac{3}{4}$ inch square, which are subject to considerably higher duties on importation than unwrought iron or iron made into bars; that the said plates were principally used to make boilers for fire engines, and boilers to make salt in, and were manufactured for use in the form in which they were imported, without alteration of shape further than that of riveting or fixing them together. That their opinion was that they ought to pay duty. That H.M.'s Solicitor General, whom they had consulted, had given it as his opinion that these iron plates came under the denomination of iron wares manufactured and not otherwise rated.

The Commissioners referred this memorial to the Land Surveyors of this port, whose duty it is to see that the revenue be not defrauded by goods being entered under wrong denominations. They, after a consultation with the agents of the Company, who promised to indemnify them if they would prosecute all the plate iron imported as unwrought iron, stopped a parcel imported from Holland, the proprietors of which, rather than stand trial, (the quantity being small,) paid duty for the same as iron ware manufactured, declaring at the same time that they would never import any more if that duty was insisted on. About the same time a parcel of plate iron was imported into Whitby, and another into this port from Sweden by Messrs. Lindgreen and Co., both which parcels were for some time under stop, but the importers thereof would not pay the high duties required, and declared their intention to stand trial in the Court of Exchequer; and as it has been the practice from time immemorial to permit plate iron to be imported as unwrought iron, they, the Commissioners, did not think it advisable to try the same, but ordered both the parcels to be delivered on payment of duty as unwrought iron. At which time the Carron Company's agents, upon a consultation with some of the principal importers, reconsidered this matter, and resolved to apply to Parliament for a clause to subject the iron in question to a higher duty on importation. As Mr. Garbett could not but be acquainted with this resolution, the Commissioners are at a loss to account for the surprise he expresses at the trial being stopped. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ pp.

Not being known to his Grace, nor able to claim more of his notice than proceeds from the course of business, yet from his Grace's known character hopes that the circumstances under which he lies may recommend him to his Grace's notice. In obedience to His Majesty's commands he ordered five "king's arms" to be provided from Liverpool, to be set up in the Courts of Justice, &c., and reserved the remaining twenty for the churches and chapels to be provided here. As people here are not acquainted in transactions with the Treasury, is obliged on such occasions to undertake for the payment of their bills. Major Pennington, now in command, declined paying the expenses of the vessel provided, in consequence of Lord Barrington's order, to transport to Scotland drafts of the Queen's Royal Regiment stationed here, alleging that he had no funds, and the Governor had to take them upon himself. This leads him to observe, that since the 17th of May last (when this Island became vested in the Crown), he has not received a farthing salary or fund to answer any service whatsoever; and all the public entertainments formerly allowed by the late Lords Proprietors have been defrayed at his own expense.—Castletown. 2 pp.

The payment is peremptorily to be insisted on, and no argument or pretence in contradiction to the payment to be listened to. When this has been settled he is to appoint some proper person to take care of British affairs at Tripoli upon the departure of Mr. Fraser, whom His Majesty has ordered home to account for his conduct towards the Imperial Consul. The Bashaw is to be made to understand that the recall of the British Consul does not in any sort proceed from any displeasure conceived against him for his conduct in the affair of the "Vincenzo." "On the contrary, had that gentleman in other things carried himself with the same propriety as he seems to have behaved with in the whole course of the affair of the 'Vincenzo,' he would not have wanted His Majesty's countenance and protection." Further, if Mr. Fraser should not have departed from Tripoli before his arrival, the Commodore is to institute a strict examination into his treatment of the Imperial Consul, and if it be found that he could so far forget decency as to have forcibly entered the Imperial Consul's house, and maltreated him and his wife personally, it is His Majesty's command that before his departure he should acquaint the Bashaw and the European Consuls there residing that he has been recalled on account of the outrages committed by him. Though several of the "Keys" and principal people of this Island made repeated representations to him of the unhappy circumstances of the inhabitants for want of employment, yet, thinking it a delicate point to interfere in, he has hitherto declined troubling his Grace upon this subject; but as they have now sent a deputation to implore the attention of Government, thinks it his duty to apprise his Grace that Mr. George Moore, the Chairman of the Keys, and two others, have set out for London on that occasion. Upon taking possession for the Crown, he did, according to instructions, assure the people of His Majesty's inclination to promote their happiness, which has prompted them to claim from him, Mr. Wood, a representation of their distressed state. Far be it from him to point out particulars; but as the promoting agriculture and manufactures was the most eligible plan he could devise for employment and support of the people, he formed, and put himself at the head of, a society (called the Manx Society) for promoting those branches of industry, which is supported by their annual subscriptions, and promises all the success that can be expected. The letter relating to money matters has been referred to the Lords of the Treasury.—Whitehall. A draft.

134. SAMUEL GARBETT to WILLIAM BURKE, Esq.

Acknowledges letter of 31st ult. Has made some alteration in his reply to the Custom-house report, and encloses a sketch of what he will probably send. Will gratefully accept of his countenance and that of Mr. [Edmund] Burke if he should attempt a bill by petition from the Carron Company or himself, which he did not intend, but will make no scruple of doing. Has an old acquaintance with Sir Charles Mordaunt and Mr. Bromley, the members for the county, and must apply through them and some of their friends whom he knows, and who would be offended if in his own name he should petition Parliament through any other hands, viz., Sir Roger Newdigate, Mr. Bagot, and Lord Grey. These old country families look upon themselves as the patrons of the trade of the neighbourhood, and really have great inclination to serve it when they distinctly understand the subject; but they are seldom troubled; and indeed somebody is sorely wanted, who is not only intelligent but hath enlarged views, to take the lead in considering our commerce as a subject of politics. His, Mr. Burke's, most ingenious cousin gave him hopes of his coming to Birmingham this summer. Will be at home in May or June, and September and October. Mr. Burke would certainly find considerable amusement by spending a week or two in this busy country. It would be an amazing scene to him. His, Mr. Garbett's, wife and family will be in Scotland till towards Christmas, so that he will have quite a bachelor's house; and if Mr. Burke would bring Mrs. Burke for the recovery of her health, would hope the journey would be doubly agreeable to him. Whilst writing, has received a most obliging letter from the Duke of Grafton relative to the men who are gone to Gothenburgh.

Is very sorry that he, Mr. W. Burke, is not in Parliament. Heartily wishes to hear soon that so warm a friend to the country is a member of the Legislature, to lend a steady hand to the protection of manufactures and the establishment of commerce, points that have been little attended to with real political skill.

Encloses a copy of his reply to the Duke of Grafton.—Birmingham.

The letter to the Duke of Grafton (the other enclosure not being forthcoming). It relates to the runaway workmen at Gothenburgh. Mr. Garbett says that he has not the least expectation that Sir John Goodricke can persuade them to return, or obtain any material intelligence about their seducers. He himself would fear more from their return, unless sufficient security were given for their continuance in Britain, than from what they can now effect without more workmen. Therefore, in point of security to the manufactures, would prefer their being outlawed to their return. Gives some information about their seducers. Shows the ill effects in Scotland from the insufficient bail taken, the Company's want of old family connexions in Scotland, and power of sometimes obtaining some of the little offices in the neighbourhood for the lower people. States that one of the workmen at Gothenburgh, viz., Graham, has sent 20 guineas to his wife in Scotland, which has had a dangerous effect upon their servants. 6 pp.

140. GOVERNOR OF THE ISLE OF MAN (WOOD) to the [DUKE OF GRAFTON].

Received by the last packet his Grace's letter of the 2nd inst., and its enclosure. It gives him concern that he omitted in his reply to the Major's justification, that he never had given any orders relative to the troops but through the commanding officer; for which he can appeal to Lieut.-Col. Raitt or the Major himself, and is sorry to appear in so unmilitary, so absurd a light. As to the affair of Capt. Barker, which gave rise to such an opinion, that was in consequence of a remonstrance made by the Captain to him, the circumstances of which appeared so reasonable that he could not avoid complying with Capt. Barker's request. Submits with what propriety he could at any time send his order to the Major, who so lately before, in his own presence, treated it with so much contempt; a repetition of which would have necessitated his arrest. Has not seen Major Pennington lately; but as it appears to be his Grace's inclination to have the affair amicably adjusted, peace and harmony have ever been his maxim, and he will accept such submission as may be consistent with his public and private character. Has written to Lord Barrington to the same effect.—Castletown. 2 pp.

Governor Barnes's letter to Mr. Secretary Conway, dated from Fort St. Lewis, Senegal, Feb. 16, 1766, is also entered, and a state of the garrison

In consequence of H.M.'s proclamation of 21st June last (which did not reach him till some time in December) thinks it his duty to send a state of the establishment. By their last letter from the African Company, of Mar. 27, 1765, they at Senegal were told that as the Company's management here was to end after Oct. 29th, no further assistance must be expected from them. This letter was accompanied by a cargo of merchandise and provisions amounting to about 2,500*l.*, being part of what they had demanded for the service of the last year. In order to make this small provision last as long as possible, they were obliged, soon after its receipt, to discontinue the repairs of the fort, and to retain only so many artificers, &c. as were necessary for its preservation. Yet, notwithstanding the utmost frugality, they are now reduced to about three months' provisions; the store of merchandise is entirely exhausted; they are already indebted near 1,500*l.* to the Moorish and Negro chiefs, their neighbours, and have no means left either to pay the people in service, or to support their credit in the country. Mr. Conway will likewise perceive by the enclosed report to what a contemptible number the garrison is reduced.

The number of the white men amounted to thirty-seven, of whom twenty-four were private soldiers.

No 3 a to d.176. COMMODORE THO. HARRISON to the RT. HON. H. S. CONWAY.

On the 17th of last month anchored before Tripoli, and acquainted the Bashaw with the object of his visit. His reply conveyed strong sentiments of prevarication. Wrote in a more peremptory style to effect by force what words could not accomplish, which produced the immediate payment of the money for the "Vincenzo." Mr. Fraser departed 19 days before his (the Commodore's) arrival. Has appointed Mr. Robert Wilkie to take charge of the British affairs of Tripoli. Begs he may be confirmed in the appointment if Mr. Fraser does not return. Made the Bashaw sensible, in the presence of his whole Court, that the recall of Mr. Fraser did not proceed from His Majesty's displeasure for his conduct in the affair of the "Vincenzo." Far from it, assured him that whenever His Majesty thought his dignity touched, or the right of his subjects infringed, he was as speedy in resentment as on the contrary he was calm, benevolent, and good; and desired that the highest respect might be paid to the British colours;—to which he assented. The first umbrage was occasioned by his (the Commodore's) not saluting a present of refreshments which it was customary at Tripoli to send on the arrival of a man-of-war. This was soon set right. The other related to the Consul he had appointed, whom they refused to salute, as he did not bring a present. In this he thought it essential to get the better of them, observing that he was sorry they should excuse themselves on lucrative motives from paying due honour to His Majesty's representative. He (the Commodore) made no doubt that what was customary would be given, but it rested with His Majesty. The salute was accordingly given. In his way to the coast of Barbary paid his respects to the Bey of Tunis. Everything there was in a perfect state of tranquillity. Has demanded satisfaction of the Dey for the insult to H.M.'s storeship "Florida," and for damages to the schooner bound from Boston to Lisbon, which was fired into and plundered. The Dey replied that he had already delivered the commission of Ahamet Benzeto Rais (the offender) to the Consul, and had broken him from ever commanding another vessel, and would pay the damages to the proprietors of the schooner. He had also given command that the greatest respect should be paid to English colours. Encloses the Bashaw of Tripoli's letter to His Majesty, and two for his Ambassador in London, a copy of the commission he had given to the acting Consul at Tripoli, and a plan of that port.—"Centurion," Algier.

Isle of Man,
v. 1, No. 40.

183. GOVERNOR OF THE ISLE OF MAN (WOOD) to MR. SECRETARY [CONWAY.]

Has been informed that the gentlemen from this Island who are now soliciting favours from the Lords of the Treasury have represented the Government here to be in a neglected and inactive state, the Courts of Justice shut up; that there is a contention between the sovereign and "manerial" jurisdictions, and the separation of their particular records; that the police of this country is in confusion; and that it would be proper to continue the intermediate Court of Appeal between the Courts of this Isle and His Majesty in Council. Though this cannot be meant as an attack upon his conduct, yet he must set these affairs in their true light.

Ever since His Majesty honoured him with the government of this Island, it has been his constant endeavour to see his Royal Commission and instructions executed to the utmost, and there has not been an article of any consequence neglected or omitted. The several Courts of Justice, in all their departments, have been held in His Majesty's name, in the same case of procedure as formerly under the Lords Proprietors, except the courts of Tynwald, general gaol delivery, and common pleas for ejectments. At the first (as there were no statute laws to promulge) the management of the public funds would have been the only business, and that would chiefly serve to open a breach between the natives and revenue offices, who have received one public fund, which the natives say the Lords Proprietors did not pretend the least right to, or direction in, but was a tax imposed by and upon themselves, and vested by law in a committee for public purposes. This point, he hoped, would have been before this represented by the Receiver General of this Isle, and cleared up by the Lords of the Treasury. As there have been no felons, a court of general gaol delivery did not become necessary; and with respect to the common pleas, the deemsters are judges, and have regularly heard and determined all actions at law other than ejectments, which being hitherto concomitant with the manorial courts, till the Duke of Athol holds his manor Courts, no inconvenience can accrue from the want of them. Moreover, there is an expense attending these courts, which the late Lords Proprietors defrayed, which he represented to the Duke of Grafton the 10th Dec. 1765; and though he had no funds now to answer this or any other expense, yet he proposed in Council that, should they think there was an immediate necessity for holding a Tynwald, he would pay the charges out of his own pocket, rather than the public business should be interrupted. By his letter of the 28th Jan. last, he also laid before his Grace the several branches and nature of the records of this Isle, and waited His Majesty's pleasure upon them without the least contention or murmur, either from the Duke of Athol or the people, and has lately received from the Board of Treasury the Attorney General's opinion for his direction. He can assure Mr. Conway that the laws and government of this Isle have met with no interruption of any consequence, nor could he ever perceive the least confusion in any branch of the police.

As for the plan of an intermediate jurisdiction between the Courts of the Isle and His Majesty in Council, the prerogative of the Lords Proprietors heretofore required that all causes and suits should first pass their cognizance before an appeal lay to His Majesty in Council; but as that prerogative is now vested in the Crown, the jurisdiction seems therein to be likewise merged, and the necessity of supporting it of course to cease. Suggests the eligibility of transmitting, before any steps are taken, plans of this kind to the Governor, lest the rights and prerogatives which the Crown is now possessed of may be encroached upon.—Castletown. 6½ pp.

Complaining of the conduct of Mr. Kirke, Consul at Algiers, for which, had it not been more out of respect to His Majesty's commission than the person of the man invested with it, he should have thought it an everlasting reflection upon his honour as an officer and a gentleman if he had omitted chastising him for his opprobrious treatment. Mr. Kirke was brought up a litigious limb of the law, and values himself upon having practised his talents in that happy occupation with success against almost every man that business or occasion gave him dealings with, even against the best friend he has in the world, to whom (to use his own expression) he is indebted for the shift upon his wife's back; and he has more than once found great pleasure in letting the Commodore know how much he got the better in suits at law of three or four officers who now bear high rank in H.M.'s navy. Gives particulars of Mr. Kirke's proceedings, and encloses a deposition of a female servant of the Consul's, who fled for protection to the "Centurion" from his house, and of the Acting Lieutenant of the "Centurion," giving an account of his proceedings in the matter.—Port Mahon.

The above having been referred to him, Mr. Conway conceives that it will not be disagreeable to him to know what has been done already in the affair, and how it comes now to be a question. This officer, who presides in the chief Criminal Court in Scotland, and sits also in the Court of Session, used only to take place according to his own seniority; the impropriety of which seemed so strong that the Court of Session, by an act of their own, decreed him to take place for the future immediately after the Lord President. But as the Courts of Session and Exchequer sometimes sit together, and as the Barons of the Exchequer have taken no step towards giving the like precedence, the Duke of "Queensborough" strongly pressing the propriety of the measure, applies to the Crown to establish the rank of the Justice Clerk, which His Majesty is inclined to do, if it is not contrary to law.

Enclosing another extract from Admiral Tyrrel's letter, representing that the French seem to pay great attention to the settling the islands of Cayenne and the Triangles, and in his opinion have something more in view than the profits that can arise from the produce of such settlements to their mother country; and that in case they should once be able to collect a force there superior to the English in those parts, they would have it in their power, whenever they thought fit, either to take or destroy the island of Barbadoes and all the Leeward Islands. Their Lordships send also copies of one to Admiral Tyrrel from Captain Knowler, whom he had sent to Cayenne to make observations, and of the enclosure, being a memorandum and two letters which passed between Captain Knowler and the Lieut.-Governor of Cayenne.

Admiral Tyrrel says further, by Captain Knowler's letter their Lordships will find that the French are once more disappointed in their attempts to establish settlements about Cayenne, from the great mortality that happened among the people that came out "to settle them colonies;" for, out of 14,000, 10,000 died; notwithstanding which they seem to persevere in their resolution to settle them. Captain Knowler says, in addition, that there were not above 50 officers at Cayenne and 100 soldiers, and they had about 44 guns mounted; the number of inhabitants did not exceed 500, and many of them came to the Commandant for leave to return to France, and he gave some of them leave; indeed they were all tired of it. The Duke of Grafton's letter of Oct. 17, 1765, has, he is persuaded, sufficiently fixed his Lordship's attention to the enforcing of the laws for prevention of our manufacturers from benefiting foreign parts by their art and skill. Yet he is so strongly pressed by a very considerable manufacturer upon the inconvenience our manufacturers suffer from the ill-judged lenity that is shown to those who are guilty of these practices, that he troubles his Lordship again upon this head.

Understands that there is one Lewis now confined at Edinburgh, who is convicted of an intention of going abroad to forward foreign ironworks, and who may probably soon find the means, by obtaining his liberty by giving bail of 15*l.*, to return to his master (for he is but an apprentice), and to stay with him till his term is expired. Mr. Conway does not take upon him to decide how the law stands, much less does he wish to be understood that his Lordship could take any step, even for a good purpose, which was not strictly conformable to law; but is informed that it will be of great hurt and detriment, if the laws for detaining our manufactures at home are not very strictly put into execution. For example as well as punishment, the principal gentlemen in the trade wish that Lewis's bail might not be confined to 15*l.*, but might be of such weight as to ensure the end it is to be given for, and that it might extend to his not leaving the kingdom.

He cannot take it upon him to say how far these points are conformable to law.

Would be obliged for his opinion whether there is any foundation for the assertion contained in the enclosed letter and note from Mr. Timothy Brecknock, that the King cannot receive and entertain at his court an Infidel Ambassador consistently with the law of the land, and that such Ambassador is not entitled to the privileges and immunities which the Ambassadors from Christian princes and states are understood to enjoy. A draft.

The enclosures. Mr. Brecknock attended Mr. Kennet, the sheriff of Middlesex, and demanded a warrant to arrest and hold to bail "the Tripoline Infidel, Hamed Aga ;" which, under the advice of Mr. Grig, the Under-sheriff, was refused. Mr. Brecknock refers his Grace to "Viner's Abridgment, under the head 'Infidel,' p. 407." He says it is also evident that the law of nations does not justify the reception of an Infidel Ambassador, nor does a Pagan one come within the description of the 7th Anne, cap. 12 ; for, to be entitled to the privileges, &c. specified in that Act, the Ambassador must come from a Sovereign Prince who is not only a friend but a good friend of Great Britain, which cannot be in the present case, since our laws hold all Infidels not only to be inimici, but perpetui inimici ; and for this reason Mr. Serjeant Hawkins, in his Pleas of the Crown, p. 434, says it seems to be a good exception to a witness that he is an Infidel. If some few of the Christian powers have of late years received Ambassadors from the Infidel states, such procedure doubtless is an innovation upon the law of nations, the law of Moses, the law of Christ, and (in Great Britain) the law of the land.

In the note Mr. Brecknock threatens to print the state of his case in the public papers if the determination in respect to his demand be not obtained and notified to him before Thursday evening; and if he cannot find redress by these mild applications, he will most assuredly carry his complaint before 25 barons of this realm, who in such case will be under a necessity of compelling the King to render an injured subject immediate justice, agreeable to the express tenets of our Magna Charta.—Dated respectively the 8th and 15th July. 5 pp.

The reply. The Duke of Richmond thinks it would not be right for the Tripoline Ambassador to give his protection to the person mentioned, as it might have the appearance of a consideration for inducing her to turn evidence against Mr. Brecknock. However, endeavours will be used to accomplish this by some means less liable to exception.

Isle of Man,
v. 1, No. 43.

245. MR. JOHN WOOD, Governor of the Isle of Man, to MR. SECRETARY [CONWAY].

Has received his letter of the 4th ult., accompanied by Mr. Cooper's letters relative to the allowance of expenses by the Lords of the Treasury. Hopes he will be pardoned taking this opportunity of representing the disagreeable position he has been in for some time past. Here has he been without salary or any fund to answer the contingent expenses of the government of the Isle since the 17th day of May 1765; and though the superior magistrates and officers rest satisfied with the assurances in His Majesty's proclamation, yet the inferior officers and constables, who were paid quarterly by the Lords Proprietors, though importunate at first, were pacified by his promises, but many are now really indigent. And though, by his letter of the 10th Dec., he requested the Duke of Grafton to direct from whence their pay was to be drawn, as they expected to be paid off upon their discharge, he has not yet been able to relieve those that are to be continued, nor to discharge those that are to be reduced. As to the funds arising from the fines and perquisites of the courts, it is well if they answer for providing fire, candle, and other necessities for the court-rooms and record repositories. But these fines and perquisites are matters of record, and therefore can be accounted for with the greatest certainty in such manner as shall be directed. They were hitherto levied together with the Lords' quit-rents by the Moars, whom, being in most respects manerial officers, he also recommended to be in no particular employed by the Crown; but that the coroners should be discharged from executing any duty which appertained to the manerial, and confined to the business of the Crown only, and have an annual allowance in lieu of the territorial privileges and emoluments which they received from the Lords Proprietors. But till some measures of this kind are taken, should there be a Debet Court, it will remain a doubt which are the proper officers to collect these fines, &c. He also informed the Duke, in January last, of his having taken possession, in behalf of the Crown, of the houses, &c. which he and all preceding Governors under the late Lords Proprietors enjoyed. These houses were neglected since the death of the late Duke of Athol; and though the present Duke claims them under the reservations of the Act of Parliament, yet, as he, Mr. Wood, retains possession, he cannot allow him to repair or exercise any right therein; and these old fabrics, without proper reparation, will not be habitable next winter. As to the charges necessarily incurred in public entertainments, upon his taking possession of the Isle in behalf of the Crown, and also upon His Majesty's birthdays and like occasions, which the Lords Proprietors provided in Castle Rushen, these he had in his own house, and at his own expense, and will submit entirely to Mr. Conway's consideration. But really it will be extremely expedient that the other exigencies of government, and proper directions as to other matters, should be adjusted. If he might be allowed, he would propose that a sum of money be appropriated, and an agent appointed in London, to answer the several exigencies of this little State.—Castletown. 6 pp.

251. The SAME to MR. [SECRETARY CONWAY].

By a Scots statute, equally revered here as the Habeas Corpus is in England, all persons imprisoned for crimes not inferring a capital punishment must be set at liberty upon their finding bail to appear and answer to any prosecution that shall be carried on against them; and the sum of such security is regulated by the rank of the prisoner. It is:—for a nobleman, 333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; a landed gentleman, 166*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*; any other gentleman and burgess, 55*l.* 11*s.* 1*½d.*; and any other inferior person, 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* These sums the judges, by a British statute, are allowed to double when circumstances require it, but further they cannot go. In spring, 1765, the partners of the Carron Company, in Scotland, applied to the Judge Admiral for a warrant against two persons, Croswell and Chrystie, who had bargained with some of their workpeople to go to Sweden, in consequence whereof Croswell was apprehended, but, upon application, was liberated upon giving double bail as an ordinary gentleman or burgess. By the Act 23 Geo. II. cap. 13. all persons who contract with, entice, or persuade any manufacturer to go into any foreign country incur a penalty of 500*l.*, besides a year's imprisonment; notwithstanding which, the Judge Admiral thought himself bound to give effect to the Scots statute, and to limit the sum in the bail bond to 111*l.* 2*s.* 2*½d.* Some time after the matter was laid before Mr. Miller, then Lord Advocate, who directed a prosecution against Croswell and Chrystie, and they, not appearing, were outlawed, and Croswell's bail bond declared to be forfeited, which was all that could be done. He, the Lord Advocate, never knew of any ill-judged lenity shown to any one charged with transgressing the laws made for preventing seduction of manufacturers into foreign countries, unless the Judge Admiral's admitting Croswell to bail is to be considered an instance, as it has the appearance of absurdity that a person should be liberated upon bail for a lesser sum than the penalty forfeited by him if guilty; but which he does not think merits that name, as the inaccuracy of the British statutes touching this matter, so far as concerns Scotland, has left the question whether the bail is to be regulated by the Scots statute or not, so very doubtful that judges will probably continue to differ in opinion about it until the doubt is removed by a new enactment. By the Act 5 Geo. II. cap. 27. sec. 4. any manufacturer who hath contracted, promised, or is preparing to go out of the kingdom, may be bound to answer with reasonable sureties for his appearance, and, upon refusal, may be committed for trial until next assizes, and, if convicted, is to be imprisoned till he finds such security. The first information he, the Lord Advocate, had of Lewis being so imprisoned was his [Mr. Conway's] letter. On enquiry, he found Lewis in a course of judicial proceedings before the Court of Session against the Carron Company, for procuring his liberty without bail, on account of some irregularities in his commitment; but the defect was supplied as well as possible, and the Court declined to judge in it, being a criminal matter proper for the cognizance of the Court of Justiciary, the criminal court in Scotland. Lewis next applied to the Court of Justiciary to be admitted to bail, which brought on the question whether the bail was to be regulated by the Scots statute or not. He, the Lord Advocate, urged the inexpediency of the construction of the law in that manner, as very properly suggested in his (Mr. Conway's) letter. Of the five judges present, two were for regulating it according to the Scots statute, and three not; and the sum in the bail bond was fixed at 100*l.* sterling.

He tries Lewis at one of the circuit criminal courts to be held next month at Stirling, a town near to the Carron Company's works; and, in order to prevent the seduction of artificers in this part of the kingdom as much as possible, has written to each of the sheriffs, recommending to their attention the making of a discovery if any such thing is practised in their respective counties, and apprehending the parties concerned, to be punished according to law. He thought it right to explain the matter thus fully in order to remove any unfavourable impression Mr. Conway may have received of the conduct of the judges and officers of the law in this part of the kingdom.—Edinburgh. 4 1771.

Enclosing a copy of a letter received from Tetuan by Mr. Popham, in consequence whereof he despatched Capt. Cosby, in H.M.S. Hopes, if Capt. Cosby is so fortunate as to meet with the vessel, thus to induce them to put a stop to the intended embassy. 258. MR. JOHN WOOD, Governor of the Isle of Man, to MR. [SECRETARY CONWAY.]

Received this day a letter from Mr. Lowndes, of the Treasury, enclosing an extract of his letter of 28th Jan. to the Secretary of State, with the Attorney General's opinion relative to the fairs, the chapel, and the houses, &c. possessed by him and all the preceding Governors rent-free, and which he held possession of as public buildings. The opinion specifies that all fairs and fair days are expressly excepted out of the Act of 5 Geo. III., and that messuages, houses, and gardens, including the chapel as part of the Governor's house, are also excepted. Will, therefore, now be obliged to rent the house, &c. at what the Duke thinks proper, as also the demesne, consisting of 54 acres, for which he and all preceding Governors paid a trifling acknowledgment of 7*l.* yearly. The Duke will, no doubt, demand rent from May 17th, 1765, as he intimated that from that day all expenses of government devolved on the Crown. Takes the liberty to ask, therefore, (if he cannot have his salary at present,) what the amount of his appointments is to be, that he may regulate his expenses and form his plans accordingly. As to the chapel, it appears absolutely necessary to continue the use of it until His Majesty's pleasure be known, there being no other place for Divine worship in this town, and it was ever appropriated for the Governor and officers, and now serves for the use of the troops.—Castletown. 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ pp.

(5 d.) Minorca. The complaints are the non-prohibition of French trade, heavy port dues, the revival of old Spanish ordonnances by the magistrates, such as the demand made upon the merchant to know the price he has paid for goods imported, for the magistrates to regulate the price of sale; the want of a lazaretto to receive and air the cargoes of ships performing quarantine, &c.

(5 g. & h.) Turkey. The English trade is in a state of great decline, affected chiefly by the increase of that of the French, which is to be attributed to the vast improvement of their cloth manufacture, and the increased facilities for introducing it. Here, too, the great want is a proper lazaretto for ships to perform quarantine. The admission into England of any shipping from Turkey with foul patents being absolutely denied, foreigners have it in their power on any frivolous suspicion to raise reports of the plague, so as to constitute foul bills of health, and thus give their navigation profitable employment. The Imperial and Ragusan colours were thus introduced, and, though 20 years ago hardly known in those parts, are become the principal carriers of the Levant products to Leghorn. The slight cloth invented by France, so peculiarly adapted to the taste of these people, has become their principal clothing, and almost the only cloth that finds a ready sale. The French suffer none but French subjects to trade between France and Turkey, directly or indirectly. An Act of Parliament is suggested, prohibiting the importation of every commodity, the growth of Turkey, but from the usual ports or places of loading them in the Grand Seigneur's dominions, in English-built ships, by members of the Levant Company, and not otherwise to be imported into Great Britain and Ireland, these commodities not being purchasable by any of the members but with the produce of English manufactures or merchandize, to the exclusion of bullion or bills of exchange. All British subjects can become members of the Levant Company by the payment of 20*l*. The Dutch have attained the reputation of fabricating a stout fine cloth, much cheaper and better than any yet imported from England.

(5 i.) The Levant Company represent that their exports are chiefly woollen manufacture, and their imports raw materials. The French cloth was brought to great perfection, and extremely proper for the Turks, and greatly decreased the Company's trade. Formerly Persia was chiefly supplied with woollen goods by the Company. As the exports of the East India and the Russia Companies increased in that kingdom, the Turkey Company decreased; and since the breaking out of the civil war in Persia (which still continues) very little cloth has been sent, and no silk has been brought from thence into Turkey for many years. The consumption of goods in Turkey is greatly decreased by the increase of oppression. "Gruff goods," such as cotton, goats wool, fruit, &c., can be imported from Italy, which is prejudicial to the Levant Company. They also complain of the intrusion of the East India Company in trading to Turkey by going round the Cape of Good Hope, having succeeded in establishing a Consul at Bassora, and a Factor at Bagdad. The trade to Bassora and Bagdad is of the greatest importance to the Turkey Company, as their trade to Aleppo is much the most considerable of any they have. There is an alteration, to their injury, in the trade to Ireland.

(5 j.) Mr. H. Grenville, in taking his leave of the Porte for England, appointed in his absence Mr. Consul Kinloch to take charge of His Majesty's service.

(5 k.) The Factors at Constantinople attribute the decay of the British commerce in the Levant, (1) to the want of a proper place where ships coming from the Levant in time of plague may, under proper regulations, perform quarantine; and (2) to the Levant Company's not having an entire exclusive charter. All the property of the Levant Company, upon any accident or report of an accident of the plague, is shut up in the warehouses. If the Government should not carry into execution the design of building a quarantine house, no other method can be taken to prevent the total ruin of the British commerce to the Levant but to imitate the example of the Dutch, and to allow ships to sail with a foul bill of health.

Excepting mohair, yarn, and silk, the rest of the Turkey trade, consisting of cottons, fruit, goats wool, carpets, and drugs, is chiefly carried on by way of Leghorn, by the Dutch, Jews, Armenians, and Italian merchants, without a yard of English manufacture being given in exchange. When the cotton and fruit crops are brought to market, upon the arrival of any of the Company's ships to load for Great Britain, the Dutch, Jews, and Italians trading to Leghorn immediately propagate reports of the plague; the Consuls consequently give foul patents, and the Company's ships are obliged to depart, leaving their loadings behind them. The consulages cannot be paid to defray their public expenses if the ships are not allowed to load home.

Since the Levant Company carry on their trade by means of "manufactories" exported from Great Britain only, whilst foreigners by way of Leghorn import into England cottons, fruit, goats' wool, carpets, and drugs, to a considerable yearly sum, by means of moneys sent from Leghorn, and moneys produced from Dutch cloth sold in Turkey, where not a yard of British manufactures is vended on account of these purchases, it appears evident that the granting an entire exclusive charter to the Company must be a very great national benefit. Existing arrangements are all in favour of foreigners. The great support of the Dutch cloth trade is their making their returns to England; could they be deprived of this advantage, their trade in cloth to the Levant would drop, as their returns to Holland almost always render a loss.

If all the nation's commerce were carried on only by means of money, the consequence of such a commerce would be, that all the specie would in the long run be carried out of the nation. The balance of such a trade is entirely against us, for it is the quantity of "manufactories" exported that gives the balance in favour of a nation. It must be a point, therefore, of the highest consequence to increase the imports of the Levant Company, since every such increase will infallibly produce an adequate increase in the exports of the national industry. The French carry on their trade in a way analogous to this. Without such remedies as these proposed, the British commerce to the Levant will inevitably be lost.

(5 m.) Island of Madeira. The Consul and Factory give the following accounts of the Island:—A circumscribed spot, of about 20 leagues in length, and 7 in breadth; very mountainous; of an exceedingly rich soil, and diversified in its climate so as to grow fruits and plants of the southern and northern growth indifferently. Upon settling the Island the inhabitants first applied themselves to the culture of the sugar cane, and for some years were pretty successful, carrying on with the mother country and France a convenient traffic in sugar and preserved citrons; but a blight getting into the cane, their crops failed, and obliged them to give up the culture, and apply to that of the vine, which answers well to the nature of their soil, and produces a wine generally esteemed. The inhabitants, by computation, number 120,000; who, besides the vine, raise likewise a sufficient quantity of wheat, rye, and barley to answer their consumption for three months. For what they further want of these articles, and every other of their consumption, they depend upon supplies from abroad sent in exchange for their wines, preserved citron, and brandies. The consumption of Madeira wines first began in the British American colonies, the inhabitants of which, being indulged by the Government with the liberty of importing direct adventures to these countries from Great Britain and Ireland, generally on their way used to touch at the Island, and, in exchange for coarse and fine woollens, wheat, flour, flax, herrings, Irish provisions, and staves, lay in their wines very conveniently. Some time after, the North Americans, finding that most of their productions were staple in the Island, from less to more, fell into the trade, and not only supplied themselves with wine advantageously, but also ventured trade in them with the southern colonies. But in little more than 20 years the trade is greatly altered; for, by an increase in the demand for Madeira wines in America, the introduction of the use of them into Great Britain and Ireland, and the large quantity required for settlements in India, which for many years the Island could hardly furnish, the natives not only had an opportunity of making their own prices, which have been and are still extravagantly high, but also of altering the mode of payment, by insisting on having bills of exchange on Lisbon or London for their best wines, being thereby able to become importers and serve themselves. This, in regard to the manufactures of England, is prejudicial, as they affect French stuffs, woollen, and silks, which they get very cheap via Lisbon, interfering in a particular manner with the sale of English fine goods. Broad cloths especially, formerly used very much, are now very little worn. The British trade in Madeira is likewise hurt by a late regulation in the exports from thence to Brazil, and by a late order from Court forbidding the entry of train oil, with which they are to be supplied in future from the Brazil fishery. Average yearly imports from Great Britain and Ireland, and the colonies are:—

100,000 bushels of wheat,
 50,000 bushels of Indian corn,
 10 to 12,000 barrels of flour,
 2 to 3,000 barrels of beef,
 500 barrels of pork,
 1 to 1,200 hogsheads of rice,

1766.

1 to 1,500 barrels of herrings,
 4,000 quintals of codfish,
 400,000 staves,
 500,000 feet of boards,
 1,000 firkins of butter,
 5 to 6,000 lbs. of beeswax,

and woollens, linens, and other manufactures, to the amount of 25,000*l.* sterling, paid for in wines and a little preserved citrons, the brandies being almost all made use of in the trade to Brazil. The Island produces, one year with another, about 15,000 pipes of wine. Of these 8,000 are generally exported for the British dominions, of which two thirds are sent to America, and the rest to Great Britain and Ireland and the settlements in India,—what remains being carried off by the Dutch and Danes, consumed in the Island, and made into brandy for the Brazil trade. The Dutch and Danes generally traffic for the low-priced wines, in exchange for cordage, canvass, and some India goods to no great extent, and even that is frequently carried on with salt provisions from Ireland; so that in effect the British have no rival of any consequence except the French. Provisions of all kinds upon importation are exempted from every sort of duty; if exported again, pay 11 per cent. ad valorem. Everything else pays 10 per cent. ad valorem, or in specie, at the will of the importer. Upon exportation 11 per cent. is insisted upon. The situation of British traders on the Island is attended with many disagreeable circumstances.

(5 n.) Sicily. The trade is much decreased of late, but more particularly in the city of Messina, which was formerly not only the mart of the whole kingdom but likewise of a good part of Calabria. The causes of the decrease are many. The city of Naples drives away the trade of Calabria, and the plague of 1743 has turned the course of trade. By the best information, the importation and “consume” of English manufactures is about one third less than formerly, owing chiefly to the poverty of the inhabitants in general, occasioned by the oppression of the barons in their estates, and want of justice in other parts, and no proper steps being taken for the promotion of trade. The fabric of coarse cloths, established of late years at Naples, has prejudiced and diminished the consume of our Yorkshire cloths, as they come out cheaper. The other sorts of English woollens and manufactures are in the same repute as formerly. In general the English trade has been maintained better than that of other nations. The products taken from the Island for English consume are raw and thrown silks, oils, manna, Lipari raisins, wines, cantharides, argoll, &c.; the value of which, however, excepting silks, is inconsiderable. The duties paid upon foreign merchandize are 1 per cent. in Messina as being a porto franco, about 7 per cent. at Palermo, and 3 per cent. for the other parts of the kingdom. Upon exports, corn pays “tarys” of 15 per general salm, answering to the English quarter; silks, either thrown or raw, 6½ per cent.

beside a gabell of 30 grains per lb. of 12 oz.: most other articles (not subject to gabell), about $3\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. The principal obstacle to our trade is the not being able to obtain justice against fraudulent debtors, who, whilst they have money in hand, generally find means to evade justice, especially as the retiring upon the estates of the Barons or upon the Church equally protects their persons. The remedy would be the appointment of a guidue conservatore to try causes, not only between English and English, but likewise between English and natives. Amongst other hardships and prejudicial novelties is an order published some years ago to oblige all merchants, without exemption, to reveal every parcel of silk they buy, and the price paid. The merchants (not to prejudice themselves by conforming thereto) make use of the expedient of purchasing and "dispending" their silks under the name of some native of the country. With regard to the navigation, the continual quarantines that all neutral vessels are subject to may be considered one of the greatest hardships, as they are imposed generally on frivolous prettexts, and probably with second views. The remedy is to have decent and fixed salaries allowed to the physicians, master notaries, and subaltern officers of the health office.

(5 o.) St. Lucar. Nothing novel has intervened since the last report, either to the prejudice or advantage of our commerce, except what has been occasionally so in the past season, from the damage done the fruit trees at Seville by the great frosts (unexampled in the memory of man), the vast scarcity of oil (not permitting one drop to be embarked), and the King's taking all the salt made to his own use. These were severe disappointments to our trading vessels, but leave no room for complaint of any innovation. The writer only guesses the effect of the treaty between His Christian Majesty and the Emperor of Morocco on commerce.

(5 q.) Naples. One great grievance the English merchants labour under, viz., that this Court, since the death in 1758 of our Delegate, the President Ventura, has, without the least pretence, most unjustly deprived them of this office of justice. The Commissary appointed instead has such diminished powers as not to be able to afford sufficient protection. Another grievance is the bankruptcy laws. A delegate, a judge on whom they can depend for justice, is much desired. 106 pp. or parts of pages.

Com.-in-chief,
v. 1, pp. 2-6.271. EARL OF SHELBURNE to MAJOR GEN. GAGE.

With respect to the quartering of the troops in New York, his Lordship wrote by the last packet to Sir Henry Moore, stating that His Majesty both expects and requires a due and cheerful obedience on the part of the provinces to the Acts of the Legislature of Great Britain, and among others to that passed last session for quartering H.M.'s troops, in its full extent and meaning. His Majesty is persuaded the discretion and moderation appearing in every part of the Major General's conduct will make the burthen as light as is consistent with His Majesty's service. It is unnecessary to suggest how desirable it is that every officer should remove, as much as possible, prejudices amongst civilians with regard to the military, by promoting a temperate and amicable intercourse between them. His accounts of the conduct of the settlers and traders in regard to the Indians are certainly most alarming and interesting. Sir William Johnson has also written accounts to the same purpose. Some general plan appears necessary for the regulation of the Indian trade and the restraining of violences. Meanwhile he is to use his utmost endeavours to enforce obedience to His Majesty's proclamation, which, if strictly attended to, would prevent these disorders. The settlers at Red Stone Creek seem to have placed themselves not only beyond the limits prescribed by H.M.'s proclamation, but beyond the boundaries, and consequently out of the protection, of any province. Orders are therefore not only to be given to the Commanding Officer at Fort Pitt to warn them of the danger of their situation, but, if that be not found sufficient, General Gage is to consider what further steps may be taken to make them entirely quit those settlements.

His Majesty is concerned to find, by accounts from West Florida, that his orders given two years ago for ascertaining the right of command between the several Governors and the Commanding Officers should be misunderstood. It is the King's decided determination that the orders of his Commander-in-chief in America shall be implicitly obeyed by the troops in every part of the provinces; also that the orders of the several brigadiers shall be obeyed independently of those of the Governors, but that all inferior officers, in the absence of the Commander-in-chief and brigadiers, be under the orders of the Governors.

His Majesty approves extremely Major General Gage's attention to the steps taken by the Spaniards on their first settlement at New Orleans. All accounts as to the navigation of the Mississippi, the settlements on both sides of the river up to the Illinois country, and the course of the Indian trade, will be very acceptable to the King.—Whitehall.

The accounts from different quarters of the country relative to the price of corn, and the riots committed, growing more serious every day, His Majesty's servants now in town, particularly the Duke of Grafton, the Earl of Chatham, and the two Secretaries of State, have thought it absolutely necessary that this important matter should be the subject of a further consideration in Council; and, that no time should be lost in so critical a situation, have resolved, in his Lordship's absence at so great a distance, that a Committee of Council be summoned to meet on Wednesday next, in order to consider of the necessity of laying an embargo on the exportation of corn. If it suited his Lordship's convenience and health, nothing could be more desired than to have the assistance of his counsel and opinion on the occasion. It is hoped that he will think this application proceeds from a desire to show every possible respect and attention to his character and station, and that the thus summoning a meeting of Council in his absence will stand excused from the weight and importance of the matter to be the subject of it.—St. James's.

Received this day a letter from Mr. Burke, stating that he (General Conway) not knowing any person in the profession, desired him, the Advocate General, to name a person to be recommended to His Majesty to act as procurator general and notary public at the ceremonial of the marriage of the Princess Mathilda, and that Dr. Paul was applied to in like manner on a former occasion. Names, therefore, Roger Altham, Esq., of Doctors' Commons, one of the procurators of the Arches Court of Canterbury and High Court of Admiralty, and notary public. He is a gentleman of one of the best families of Essex, of very strict honour, of property, much respected in his profession, and of great modesty and deference to his superiors. Mr. Burke asks if Mr. Tyndall (who is dead), mentioned in the Court Register as King's proctor, is of the rank that is styled procurator general in the report? The King's proctor and the procurator general are the same person, as the King's Advocate is the King's Advocate General, and all proctors are notaries, though all notaries are not proctors.

P.S.—Will be in town at his house in Southampton Street, Bloomsbury, on Sunday night. Has written very fully to the celebrated French advocate, Mr. Elie de Beaumont, as Lord Shelburne desired, concerning notarial authentications and the practice in France, but will not send the letter before communicating it to him (Mr. Conway) and Lord Shelburne.—Twinsted Hall, near Sudbury, Suffolk.

ticularly in the towns of Oxford and Woodstock, and of the outrageous proceedings of the mob under pretence of distress from the high price of wheat and other provisions,—and there being reason to think that, notwithstanding the steps taken by Government for removing these complaints and suppressing disorders, they have rather increased than diminished, and that the mobs have become daily more numerous and insolent from a want of strength or due exertion of the civil powers,—and H.M.'s troops being, in consequence of the numerous applications from a great variety of places, almost entirely disposed of in the neighbourhood of the places chiefly infested,—Mr. Conway acquaints his Grace with these particulars. The King, having the greatest confidence in his Grace's prudence, and his spirit and zeal for the public service, thinks that, from his weight and influence both as Lord Lieutenant of the county of Oxford and from his personal character and great property, the most essential service may be expected,—and as a want of activity in the use and exertion of the civil powers by the ordinary magistrate seems in many instances to be amongst the chief causes of these continued outrages,—His Majesty trusts that he will, by his authority and advice, give that vigour and energy to the exercise of the several powers of Government which may effectually tend to the suppression of this evil.—St. James's.

They ask that a sentence by which their rents for houses occupied by the French were confiscated, pronounced against them, in the absence of the Lieut. Agrees entirely with him that there is a very unjustifiable licence in that kind of publication, yet does not see how it can be prevented. It ought certainly to be discouraged; and possibly, if the gentlemen of the county in concert would attend to it, the law might afford means of punishing the printer for his impudence, to call it no worse; but nothing can be done from any other quarter.

States the proper time for a messenger to meet him. Will next post lay before the Duke of Grafton particulars of the means he has taken to prevent plate iron being imported as unmanufactured, an evil much increasing. Will also acquaint him that at a little port [the Carron Company] have in a manner created in Scotland, he has proposed to give the Custom-house officers 100*l.* a year certain, as a present, over and above all fees that they are entitled to by Act of Parliament upon their ships, and which they refuse to accept, insisting on his paying the arbitrary fees they had by their own power imposed upon little shippers before the Company came into the country, and which never amounted at this port to 5*l.* a year. Indeed, has for some years acquiesced in paying what they said was customary, and to the amount of a larger sum than he now offers, but this he did as a stranger desirous of avoiding quarrels. But as their trade is increasing, these arbitrary though customary fees will amount to an enormous perquisite, such as was never known in Scotland, nor, he believes, in England. What aggravates the imposition is, that it is laid upon articles that are either the product or manufacture of the neighbourhood. Will lay before his

320. SAMUEL GARBETT to WILLIAM BURKE, Esq.

Asks whether his letters of the 23rd and 25th inst. have come to hand. The encroachments that are making in various ways by foreigners on our manufactures, the fraudulent tricks practising in our own country which bring our articles into disrepute, the little, very little, attention given by Administration to support our manufactures, afford a very mortifying prospect to such as himself who see the ground which is being lost daily. Would rejoice to hear of a committee of warmhearted men being formed to take into consideration the state of British manufactures for exportation. Till that is done there is little chance of anything effectual being done for their support at foreign markets. There would then be an evident place for men of real business, who cannot lose much time in attendance, &c., to give intelligence and make application. Surely a set of gentlemen could be found in Parliament who would give some attention to a point of such importance. If manufacturers should believe our legislators are so far lost to the public, common prudence may soon influence the most judicious to accept (if not seek for) the advantages they may obtain by leaving Britain. It shocks him to view what passes in his mind on this subject.—Birmingham. 2 pp.

325. JAS. MONTAGUE to LORD SHELBURNE.

Giving his ideas of the reasons of the high price of corn and other provisions, and some probable method to prevent it,—a matter to which his thoughts have been much turned since he waited on his Lordship at Boughwood.

Considers that the bounty on the exportation of corn, which when first settled had certainly a good effect, should be discontinued, as great abuses had been committed. While corn is at such a price that it is not entitled to the bounty, yet vast quantities are eagerly caught up and exported. The ingrossing of farms is another cause of the evil. A farmer who rents 1,000*l.* per annum is master of all the markets within reach. A few of these will, by withholding their corn, raise the price at any time to what pitch they please. Though he would not debar a man from extending his business and advancing himself by all fair and honest means, yet he should not be allowed to do this by oppression, and at the cost and hazard of the community, to which he is as much obliged by their consumption as they are by his industry. Every rank and degree in the community is obliged by all the ties of society to help every other, and therefore no hardship is put upon any part of it, if, by a penal law, this mutual assistance is enforced. Wheat now sells at Chippenham market at 9*s.* the bushel. This is not owing to scarcity, there being at least as much corn grown this year as last, but to confederacy. He himself sent to market for a quarter of wheat, and though there were many loads there, and it was soon after the market bell rang, wherever his agent applied, the answer was "Tis sold." So that, though 'tis too true, to avoid the penalty of the law, they bring it to market, yet the bargain is made before, and the market is but a farce; which if permitted to be acted, his Lordship and he must think themselves much obliged to the miller if he will let them have bread for their families at his own price. This confederacy then must be broken. Has heard many farmers say, and it is in the mouth of them all, that if they could be sure of never having less than 5s. a bushel for wheat, they would not desire more, and that would content the poor. It is impossible to limit the price of provisions, but, at the same time, it would be no hardship to oblige the farmer, when corn is above a certain stated price, to bring it to market. Suggests heads of a law for this purpose, the intention of them being to put a stop to forestalling; to create a distrust between the confederates,—the only way to break the confederacy; to ascertain the price of corn; to put a stop to ingrossing and other bad practices of the miller; and to prevent the farmer from withholding his corn in order to raise the price. He proposes, among other things, that while every sale must be made in the open market, the clerk of the market should enter in a book all sales of corn, with the names of the buyer and seller, the quantity sold, and the price per bushel.

Something must be done, and that speedily, or he trembles to think of the consequences. Is certain that if the troops quartered in the county were to be removed, they would be in a much worse state than before their arrival. Winter coming on, corn greatly advanced in price, manufactures dead, and labour scarce, how are the poor to live? Does not wonder at their mutinous disposition when they see themselves oppressed with hunger in the midst of plenty. It is not only to corn, but to every article of food, that this evil has spread itself, and all owing to the infamous practices of jobbers, the most pestiferous vermin that ever infested the kingdom.—Dated Oct. 31.

Finds that Jos. Brown twice saw the person who came to enquire for Jos. Adams at the inn. It is vexatious. However, he could not learn anything material from Groves' brother, except that he knew Cotterell was concerned in the seduction. A jockey who had been with 20 horses to Vienna had told Groves that he had met his brother and the other two men; that he had seen the house provided for them in Vienna, and heard great talk about them, and that many were expected. Brown says that, no doubt, many will go if they hear good accounts of the usage these meet with. Hopes it will be thought right to outlaw those that are gone. The trade hath a melancholy prospect, and if somewhat is not soon done to prevent the encroachments that are constantly making by foreigners in various modes, the consequence may be very serious.—Birmingham. 2 pp.

The Crown, at the giving of the statutes, reserved the nomination of these pensioners, who ought to be virī paupertate gravati, vel bello mutilati, vel senio confecti, and whose duty consists in attending daily the Divine service of the church, and in sweeping and keeping it clean. 337. The SAME to WM. DALLAWAY, Esq.

Has received his letter enclosing the continuation of the calendar of the rioters already committed, as also the incendiary paper herewith returned. It has most probably been meant only to intimidate; agrees, therefore, with Mr. Dallaway that it may be best to endeavour, by a secret enquiry, to discover the writer of it. If, however, Lord Ducie Morton, or himself, should at any time think it advisable to have it printed in the Gazette, with a promise of pardon to the person who discovers the author, he will endeavour to obtain it. Some reward at the same time must be offered. The queries sent to him relative to the evidence contained in the examinations are for the information of the Attorney General. Mr. Conway will not fail to represent to the Secretary-at-War the necessity of letting the dragoons remain where they are; but there has not hitherto been any intention to remove them.—St. James's.

Isle of Man,
v. 1, No. 49.345. JOHN WOOD, Governor of the Isle of Man, to MR. [SECRETARY CONWAY].

Thinks it his duty to state that Mr. George Moore, Chairman of the Keys, has set out for London to solicit the Lords of the Treasury for indulgences in trade and encouragement of the manufactures of the Isle. In his speech to the people upon taking possession in behalf of the Crown, he, the Governor, did, according to instructions, assure the people of His Majesty's inclinations to promote their happiness. The Keys have had their meetings to consult upon plans for employment of the poor people in the present exigency. But their propositions ran so much upon trade that he judged them foreign to the intention of Government when the jurisdictions of this Isle were purchased. Yet, upon finding their Chairman violently bent upon pursuing the measures they had adopted, he thought it expedient to acquaint him by letter that he understood the general sense of the people, as well as of several merchants, to be to confine their present application entirely to the internal advantages which the Isle might derive from a proper encouragement given to agriculture, manufactures, and fisheries. These were the objects he, the Governor, had always recommended, and to which he promised his best support. He likewise intimated that the taking off the duties upon British manufactures imported into the Isle might probably be listened to. With respect to the articles of trade, his design was (without their privacy) to have first laid them before Mr. Conway, to obtain directions how far they might be countenanced or discouraged. Mr. Moore by letter acknowledged that this plan corresponded with the sentiments of the gentlemen of the landed interest, but that the intended application had been set on foot and carried on by the merchants; and though the application should more properly be made by the Governor, yet as it had begun in another channel he could not now recede.

The people have ever been taught to believe that no public favours were granted but through the Governor, and that all preferments and commissions within the Isle, both in Church and State, were obtained from him, or by his recommendation; which enabled him happily to rule a people whose obedience he has experienced more from motives of regard than authority, and most particularly in the late critical times, both before and after this Isle became vested in the Crown, when his personal interest and influence were of the greatest consequence in supporting him in the preservation of peace and good order. Submits to Mr. Conway how far these happy effects may be looked for in case new avenues to power are laid open. Would not start difficulties, but in case His Majesty extends any marks of royal favour or commerce to the poor people of the Isle, he suggests the propriety of their being communicated through him, who, in obedience to His Majesty's commands, had impressed the people with a sense of his royal inclination towards them.—Castletown, No. 3. 5 pp.

348. EARL OF SHELBURNE TO MAJOR GENERAL GAGE.Com.-in-chief,
v. 1, pp. 8-15.

Signifying His Majesty's approbation of the disposition of the troops. The King was pleased to find quiet restored in Albany and Duchess county, and hoped that the punishment inflicted on some of the delinquents would have prevented any complaints for the future, but late accounts from Boston give room to think that the whole of this affair has not been transacted with the requisite prudence, it being feared that the Sheriff of Albany may have rather exceeded the bounds of discretion, if not his legal powers. It is to be hoped that the rights of the parties were well ascertained before the aid of the military was called in, for few exigencies can justify such a kind of decision. Since his last, has read more of the Major General's correspondence. Observes throughout his, the Commander-in-chief's, conduct a diligent regard to the dignity of Government, the discipline of the army, and the felicity of H.M.'s American subjects.

The importance of North America and its commerce, the disconnected state of the provinces, the particular interest of each, the general interest of the whole, the subordination to the mother country, the variety and extent of the service, and the management of Indian affairs, are points of such mighty importance that they demand not only the utmost attention at home, but also the utmost vigilance and prudence abroad. Acquaints him, therefore, with three very material points which are thought to require the deliberation of the King's servants:—

1. A proper system for the management of the Indians, and for the carrying on the commerce with them on the most advantageous footing.

2. The most eligible manner of disposing of the troops, as well for convenience as for offence and defence.

3. A reduction of the contingent expenses of the establishment in North America, and the raising an American fund to defray American expenses in part or in the whole.

Directs him to pay the utmost attention to these three points, and from time to time to transmit such information and reflections as shall occur to him.

In regard to the first article, that of Indian affairs, a plan formed some time back has been under deliberation, which, having been transmitted to all the Governors in North America, probably came under the Commander-in-chief's notice. Many articles in it, however, appearing not so well calculated for the end proposed as could be wished, and several others being rather detrimental to it, there is a necessity either of reforming it or of substituting another. But his Lordship doubts whether any method of managing Indians can be found preferable to that of leaving the trade of each province to the particular care of that province, under some general rules and restrictions, to which all the provinces must be subject. The only province in which the above-mentioned plan has been tried is West Florida, and it has not been at all recommended thereby.

A plan drawn up by Lord Barrington has been some time under consideration for quartering the troops. It is possible in the end that His Majesty may leave it to the Commander-in-chief's prudence and judgment. In any changes of the present disposition there may be occasion to make, regard is to be had to render the military as little burthensome to the inhabitants as possible, by disposing them preferably among the young colonies, where in many respects they must be considered as advantageous, than in the more settled colonies, except where they are wanted.

The third article is of the greatest consequence. The forming an American fund to support the exigencies of Government, in the same manner as is done in Ireland, is what is so highly reasonable that it must take place sooner or later. The most obvious manner of laying a foundation for such a fund seems to be by taking proper care of the quit rents, and by turning the grants of land to real benefit, which might tend to increase rather than diminish the powers of Government. Very great abuses have taken place in both respects. Proper regulations for these purposes might be the means of preventing Indian disturbances for the future, which now in great measure arise from individuals possessing themselves of their lands without the knowledge of Government. It is far from His Majesty's intention that any rigour should be exercised in respect of quit rents long due, but nothing can be more reasonable than that the proprietors of large tracts of land (which ought to have been cultivated long since) should either pay their quit rents punctually for the time to come, or relinquish their grants in favour of those who will. Desires the best information possible as to the manner of making out grants of land for the future.

Although the reduction of expense in America is a very necessary point, the Treasury do not wish to retrench any expense which can contribute to the advance of the country. Their intention is that no expense shall be spared which is really useful, but that none shall be incurred which is not so. This can only be effected by a thorough digest and judicious arrangement of the different departments in America. Every hint as to the best manner of suppressing smuggling will be attended to.

By latest advices from West Florida, there is reason to fear that affairs are not so well managed with the Southern Indians as they might be. The King by no means approves the policy of fomenting wars among the several Indian nations, and setting them at variance on every trivial occasion, for if the Indians were once induced to look upon the English as their friends and protectors, and as the arbiters of their differences, we should find our account in it. The propriety of managing Indian affairs in the northern district by one superintendent only is obvious. Major Gorham is therefore to look for His Majesty's intentions to Sir W. Johnson, whose activity and integrity cannot be too much commended.

As to his questions about Counts Gyllenbourg and Wassenbourg, he must be totally mistaken as to dates. Imagines that Count Gyllenbourg was Minister here, and was afterwards seized in Holland and his papers sent over, in Charles the Twelfth of Sweden's time. At least it was on a supposition of a designed invasion of these kingdoms by him and the Czar Peter. Now the former was killed in 1718, the latter died in 1725. However, is sure Count Gyllenbourg never had a present. Remembers Count Wassenbourg well, having introduced him himself. He died in 1743, was never ordered to depart the kingdom, and his sister, after his death, received the present he would have had, had he taken leave. Assures him there is no such thing as giving presents to those who are either ordered to go or depart, by order of their own Court, without taking leave. 1½ pp.

Admiralty,
v. 156,
No. 19 a, b.352. COMMODORE SPRY to the EARL OF SHELBURNE.

Giving an account of his proceedings with the Emperor of Morocco. After certain ceremonial observances and visits, which engaged the whole of the 24th of October, finding that the Alcaide had only a very limited authority, he wrote to the Emperor requesting the appointment of some person with full powers, and entreating that the crew saved from the ship "Pitt," of Liverpool, which had been cast away just before his arrival, near Cape Bajador, might be delivered to him; at the same time acquainting the Emperor with the service which he had rendered to one of his ships of war which had put into Gibraltar bay in distress. On the 16th of November he received advices that his Imperial Majesty had appointed Sidi Abdallah Bumelsoe, a man of great weight and influence, to treat with him, attended by Samuel Sumbel, a Jew, a man well acquainted with trade and business, very sensible, much in the Emperor's esteem, and his Minister for transacting his business with foreign powers. Finally, on the 8th instant, the additional articles which he, the Commodore, encloses, were signed. By the first, he secured the release of the "Pitt's" crew. By the second, finding on his arrival that Mr. Popham had been re-established in his consulate, and that his Imperial Majesty had apologised for his ill-treatment of him, the Commodore had only to settle matters so as to prevent any such proceedings for the future. These articles were agreed to without the least alteration, but he met with great difficulty in obtaining the third. This they positively refused to grant, alleging that his Imperial Majesty had an undoubted right to establish what regulations he pleased in his own dominions, but it was obtained by a threat of leaving, and by some money and presents well disposed. By this, though he could not prevail with them to lessen the present duties, which have been many years established, he has prevented any future augmentation, has effectually destroyed the monopoly which the Spaniards have been endeavouring to accomplish by their peace, and has amply provided for the refreshment of H.M.'s ships, before restricted to a certain quantity. He has also obtained for H.M.'s subjects the preference in every new branch of commerce, which may probably be advantageous, as the Emperor's thoughts are entirely turned on accumulating money; for which purpose he is encouraging trade in all his ports, and removing whole villages at a time from the inland country to the sea coasts, which are but thinly inhabited. And, lastly, he has destroyed the private agreement between the Spaniards and the Emperor, which stipulates that they shall be allowed to export cattle from the port of Larache at a much lower duty than British subjects pay at Tetuan and Tangiers. For these privileges the Spaniards paid a very great sum of money. As soon as the articles were signed he delivered His Majesty's present, and received a letter from his Imperial Majesty to the King, which he encloses. The sum of 1,000*l.* is, he fears, scarcely sufficient to defray all expenses. —Gibraltar.

353. WILLIAM BURKE to MR. BURNABY.

Would have answered his letter sooner, but waited for the result of the enquiries Gen. Conway ordered to be made on the points contained in his memorial. It has been found an invariable rule never to give presents to ministers who are ordered to depart without taking a formal leave; and as it appears by Lord Hartington's letter to him of the 30th June 1741 that he was directed to do so, the General thinks he cannot make a demand of this sort in his, Mr. Burnaby's, favour. Mr. Burke wishes he could make a satisfactory answer to the other point in his memorial, viz., the ill-usage he met with in the long detention of his baggage, and the high duties exacted from him, founded upon an obsolete law not enforced on other foreign ministers contemporaries of his at the court of Stockholm; but the General fears that the King would not, at so great distance of time, make this the object of a negotiation. If any recompense is proper on this head, it would seem that it ought to be from his own Court, and to have been settled on his return home. Did he make the demand at that or any other time, and what were the objections then made to it?—St. James's.

At the same time, in two votes (enclosed) of the House of Commons, when the gentleman was in Parliament, he has the title of Sir Richard Perrott. He now asks His Majesty to grant him a warrant of rank and precedence as a Baronet from 1st July 1716, when the dignity was first intended to be granted to his uncle, James Perrott. Desires the Attorney General to state his opinion, and, in case he shall see no reasons against complying with the request, to prepare a warrant for the purpose.

The following is also entered:—"Admiral Cornwall, when he sailed to the Mediterranean, had it given him in charge, in conjunction with James Perrott, Esq. by George the First, to redeem all British subjects who should be found in slavery in the Barbary States. They expended on that expedition a much larger sum than ever they received, and often solicited the balance in the King's lifetime; and afterwards the late King, who, while at Hanover, to make them some return for their services and losses, created them Baronets with precedence from the 1st July 1716; but, though promised the patent at the expense of the Crown, found, on their application here for their warrants, before they could obtain them with the limitation as stipulated, (viz., that of

The validity of the election, when that was known, was never disputed. After the death of Sir Jas. taking the least alarm on the occasion, for the common people in all the clothing counties are sufficiently frightened at the late executions; and a scheme is likewise begun, munificently encouraged by Lord Botetourt, for selling household bread to the poor at a low price. However, has just now sent to the gaol to get the rioters under sentence of death and respited during His Majesty's pleasure, to insert immediately in the Gloucester Journal an earnest supplication to their companions to desist from all such attempts, lest it should provoke the Government to withdraw its mercy. Had the plan which he proposed at first been adopted, viz., to associate in defence of Government, and to preserve the peace with one hand, and to subscribe for the relief of the deserving and meritorious poor with the other, all the mischiefs and expenses would have been prevented.—Gloucester.

Law Reports,

403. The FRENCH INHABITANTS OF GRENADA.

Case submitted to the Hon. C. Yorke with regard to Grenada, where the French residents have taken the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, but cannot make the declaration against transubstantiation. Of the 24 members composing the Assembly, they desire to have six chosen out of their own people; and of the 12 members in Council, they desire two; and one justice of the peace in each quarter, of which there are four; and they are now applying to the Administration to be indulged in these respects. In the Leeward Islands, Barbadoes, and Jamaica, they do not admit a person to be of the Council, Assembly, or a justice of peace, but such as not only take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration (which all the French at Granada have done), but also subscribe the declaration against transubstantiation; and in Granada they follow the same rule. The questions submitted are:—

I. "Can or ought the Act directing the test, made so long before the conquest of these countries, inhabited by Roman Catholics only, to be considered as a prohibitory law, excluding every Roman Catholic from any civil office in his own country? Or ought it to be considered as a law of Great Britain not extending to conquests?"

II. "Is it in the power of the King, on any good consideration, to dispense with the test against transubstantiation in his new subjects in these conquered countries, either for ever or for any certain time? Or can this test be dispensed with by Act of Parliament only?"

Mr. Yorke's reply is written on the blank pages of the "case" submitted to him, apparently by his own hand. He says that in the new conquests, ceded by the late treaty, it is matter of political judgment whether His Majesty will require it to be taken by all persons who may become members of the Assembly or Council, or be appointed justices of the peace; but that the statute does not extend to them. The treaty of peace stipulates only the free exercise and toleration of the Roman Catholic religion in the countries ceded by France. His Majesty is still the judge whether he will demand the test from persons employed in offices of trust, or in any function relating to Government, so as to exclude his new subjects from any share in it. French Papists will readily enough renounce the supremacy of the Pope, and disclaim a foreign ecclesiastical jurisdiction; but the test relates to a tenet of their religion and worship, and therefore cannot in conscience be taken by them.

[It is mentioned that Canada was inhabited by 80,000 French Roman Catholics, and 200 or 300 English only.]

On the back is:—"For Mr. Yorke's opinion. 3 Gas. Your opinion on this case is much wanted. Wilmot. Bloomsbury Square." 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ pp.

407. COMMODORE SPRY to the EARL OF SHELBURNE.

Enclosing letters from Messrs. Hosier and Adams, merchants at St. Cruz, Mr. Jacob Benider, H.M.'s Vice-Consul at Tangier, and Mr. Sumbel, the Emperor of Morocco's Secretary of State for European Affairs; from which will be seen his Imperial Majesty's present sentiments with regard to us; and laying before his Lordship what passed in a private interview between him and this Sumbel. The latter stated that he could as easily have set aside the Spanish treaty as take a pinch of snuff; but complained that though he had often been a friend to the English, they had never taken the least notice of him, while the Spaniards were very liberal. He said, however, that there was no need to entertain such jealousy of them, as, the whole nation being greatly dissatisfied with their alliance, it was impossible long to continue friends, notwithstanding that they expected every hour a Spanish Ambassador, who would bring great presents, in order to set a finishing hand to treaties that were already made, and others that were proposed. He intimated also that it would be in his power to be of service on many occasions. Being very sensible of this, he (the Commodore) promised that if Sumbel, in the negotiations which the Spaniards were carrying on, would have a regard to the interests of Great Britain, he should be mentioned to His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State, who would, no doubt, reward him. He answered that he knew very well it was the Emperor's interest to be friends with the English; that he would take care of their interests at the Court of Mequinez, and that he expected no reward till his services should merit it. He then said the Emperor was so much disgusted with the French King for his late attack upon Larach, that he swore solemnly he never would forgive that nation, and that the truce he made with them was only to gain time to fortify that harbour. The Emperor had written to the King of England to send him an engineer and some masons. Sumbel promised to send through the channel of Mr. Benider, the English Vice-Consul at Tangier, who is a Jew, and speaks Arabic perfectly well, accounts of what should pass from time to time at his Court; and at parting, said he was strictly charged by the Emperor to desire the appointment of a Vice-consul at Sallee. This, the Commodore observes, is a thing much wanted, which would be of great benefit to trade, as there is scarce any communication by land, and none at all by sea, between Tetuan, the residence of the Consul General, and the ports of Saffy, Sallee, St. Cruz, and Mogador, all lying on the southern coast, where the chief of our trade, except the supplies of provisions for Gibraltar, is carried on, and from whence we fetch mules for West India Islands, corn, flour, wax, copper, and morocco leather. For this appointment recommends Mr. Jacob Benider, the Vice-Consul at Tangiers; who, beside being a perfect master of the language, is well known to the Emperor and his Ministers, and would therefore be very acceptable to them. He is willing to remove for a salary of 100*l.* a year, which is as little as can be given him, considering the Emperor visits all this country at least once a year, and is generally two or three months on his tour, all which time the Vice-Consul will be obliged to attend him.

The Moorish Ambassador, who has been some time at the Court of Madrid, has arrived at Cadiz on his return to Morocco. The very extraordinary reception he has met with in Spain, his Lordship will see by the enclosed extract from a letter from Capt. Dickson, of H.M.S. "Jersey." He is accompanied by Don Jorge Juan, a man of rank, who goes Ambassador to the Court of Morocco. The presents he carries are exceedingly rich and magnificent, and valued at 140,000 hard dollars, among which is a velvet tent, embroidered with gold, for the Emperor, that cost 50,000. Should Mr. Sumbel disclose the secrets of this negotiation, submits whether he may not make him a handsome present. They want to distress the garrison of Gibraltar by purchasing all the cattle near Tangier. From being in Barbary, has learnt this lesson, that the Emperor fears, and the common people love, us more than any other European nation. Is convinced that a little occasional bullying will have more weight than all the Spanish presents; for should this peace be made to our prejudice, and occasion the least rupture, it is his opinion that an insurrection would very soon follow.

Begs to have the appointment of Minister to the Republic of Genoa, like his predecessor, Commodore Harrison.—Gibraltar.

411. RICHARD WOLFALL to MR. BURKE.

Enclosing a letter to himself from Mr. Stonehewer in reply to one he wrote Jan. 9th, a copy of which is also enclosed.

From these letters it appears that this Mr. Wolfall first applied to Genl. Conway, offering to supply an account of the state of the French finances; and the result was a negotiation, which extended over 18 months, during which time he attended Mr. Conway, and met with much kindness from him. His affair was then passed over to the Duke of Grafton, and his proposal entertained; viz., that he should be constantly employed in getting over from France all the ordinances, arrêts, edicts, declarations, and other publications relating to their commerce and finances as they occurred, and in properly arranging them in order to be laid before the different departments. For these services he asked for an establishment for life of 500*l.* a year. This the Duke of Grafton would not undertake to advise, but said he would be ready to recommend to His Majesty whatever Genl. Conway should think a suitable satisfaction for his attendance upon him; Mr. Wolfall's papers being at the same time returned to him, with the assurance that in regard to them the strictest secrecy had been observed, that not a word had been copied, and that the confidence with which he communicated them would not at any time be in the least degree abused. In consequence of this, Mr. Wolfall again applied to Genl. Conway, through Mr. Burke, asking him to speak to the Duke of Grafton upon the subject, offering to accept, in case it should be inconvenient to settle upon him a pension for life, any employ in England or the settlements; or, if this should be inconvenient too, throwing himself upon Genl. Conway's humanity for what he and the Duke of Grafton should think an equitable indemnification for his loss of time and great expense during this "unhappy negotiation." 7 and 2 half pp.

414. MR. SECRETARY CONWAY to the ATTORNEY GENERAL.

In consequence of information received in April last from some of the principal persons concerned in the Garron (sic) Company in Scotland, of artificers, manufacturers, &c. being enticed from Great Britain in foreign countries, Sir John Goodricke, H.M.'s Envoy Extraordinary in Sweden, was directed to endeavour to prevail upon some of these persons who were gone to establish themselves near Gothenburgh to return to England, and to inform them of the penalties to which they were liable in case of refusal. The enclosed narrative of what passed between them and Mr. Marriott, then residing at Gothenburgh as chaplain to the English Factory, will inform him of the steps taken in consequence. The Attorney General is to report his opinion whether these persons, as described by Mr. Marriott, come within the meaning of the Acts made for preventing manufacturers, &c. establishing themselves in foreign countries; whether the notice given to them by Mr. Marriott will be sufficient for prosecuting them; and, if not, what are the proper steps to be taken.

"The Rev. Mr. Marriot's narrative." Authorized by Sir John Goodricke, he enquired after, and found out with great difficulty, James Kennaway, George Graham, Nieman Wise, and Peter Clark, Scotch manufacturers, and spoke with them frequently; once at his own house, apprising them that if they did not forthwith return to their own country, they would be prosecuted according to law, and outlawed. He dealt the same way with Robert Bowie, a lad who was enticed over by Croswel, who is already outlawed, and was the inveigler of them all. They said they could make more money there, and did not value the outlawry, nor would be prevailed on to go to speak with Sir John Goodricke, who was willing to bear the expense of any of them to Stockholm. Kennaway, the principal of them, accused the Company of "villanies on their part," and that they had employed British subjects in the same way in foreign countries. This man is a house-builder; Graham, Wise, and Bowie (brother-in-law to Graham) are improvers of land; and Clark, a smith. They were engaged in Mr. Cahman's works, about four miles from the town.

Admiralty,
v. 156,
No. 22 a, b.420. COMMODORE SPRY to the EARL OF SHELBURNE.

Relative to the enclosed memorial of Mr. Popham. It appears very just, and the charges he craves allowance for absolutely unavoidable. No business is to be carried on with the Moors but by bribes. If he, the Commodore, had been obliged to go to the Emperor's Court at Mequinez, 3,000*l.* would scarcely have defrayed the expenses of the mission. Mr. Popham's expenses are small, compared with those of the Dutch, Swedish, and Danish Consuls. The last paid 6,000 hard dollars for an interview with the Emperor; and the Dutch Consul's visit to his Imperial Majesty about two months ago cost him upwards of 1,500*l.* To keep up a good understanding Mr. Popham must sometimes make the Emperor and his ministers small presents, and his zeal for his master's service has led him into such distress that his situation really merits compassion.

Will give a recent instance of the venality of these people. This morning he received the enclosed letter from Prince Muley Idris, the Emperor's cousin, General of his Forces, and the first man in his dominions, thanking him (the Commodore) for a present made to him (the Prince). The messenger who brought it waits at Tetuan, and he will be obliged to send him 20 hard dollars for himself, and a further present of 6 lbs. of tea and 12 loaves of sugar, or some such trifle, for the Prince, or his Highness would be highly disgusted; and such small presents as these the Emperor is not above accepting.—Gibraltar.

Having, in view of the two plans formed by the Spaniards for the surprise of Gibraltar, the one by land, the other by sea, communicated by his Lordship, gone to inspect those places where there was the least probability of an attack being made by water, it is his opinion that they are all so well fortified and secured that no attack can be made on the sea side with the least prospect of success. Will not, however, be the less on this account on his guard. Requests a reinforcement of two frigates, or a frigate and a sloop. Enclosing a list of Spanish ships of war at Cadiz. The Spaniards are sending all their largest and best ships to Ferrol, and it is said that a very formidable fleet will be assembled there in the spring.—Gibraltar.

429. EARL OF SHELBURNE to MAJOR GENERAL GAGE.

His (the Major General's) opinion of the impropriety and inexpediency of an Indian war is certainly just, and accords entirely with His Majesty's sentiments, who wishes that every means may be used to conciliate the tribes, and who was, therefore, greatly displeased to receive accounts that the Governor of West Florida had resolved on a war with the Creeks without waiting for instructions, or even for answers to his letters on the subject. He has, therefore, been recalled from his government, which will devolve, till another Governor can be appointed, on Mountford Browne, Esq., the Lieutenant Governor, who will, at the same time, receive His Majesty's commands to use every effort to terminate this rash and unadvised war, taking care to make the Indians sensible that they owe the cessation of hostilities to His Majesty's clemency. His Majesty has permitted a congress to be held for this purpose, if absolutely necessary.

The account of the probability there is of avoiding an Indian war, contained in the Major General's letter just received, gives His Majesty great satisfaction. His Majesty highly approves Col. Taylor's prudent and sensible conduct.—Whitehall. (No. 3.)

Isle of Man,
v. 1, No. 50 a, b.

441. MR. JOHN WOOD, Governor of the Isle of Man, to MR. SECRETARY [CONWAY].

The enclosed is a letter from Mr. Heywood, Deemster (Judge), and one of the principal gentlemen of the Isle, the particulars which he mentions being, in the present situation of affairs, of consequence. Mr. Lutwidge is the Receiver General of the Isle, and now in London; Mr. Betham is Collector of Douglas, and in Mr. Lutwidge's absence at the head of the Revenue Department; Mr. Christian is one of the first merchants in Douglas; and Mr. Younger, Postmaster and Deputy Commissary for the troops.

The Keys having received intelligence from Mr. Moore, their chairman, now in London, that a plan of Mr. Lutwidge's was laid before the Board of Treasury for annexing this Isle to the county of Cumberland, they are now assembled, and in the greatest consternation. Submits to Mr. Conway's consideration how these alarms and jealousies may be increased by this report to Mr. Betham ; and how his (the Governor's) credit with the people must be injured by a gentleman of Mr. Lutwidge's character asserting and propagating in this manner that he is privately opposing the measures of the country, and representing the little regard paid to what he (the Governor) writes. It would be presumptuous in him to point out the consequences which may arise from the communicating to the people his correspondence with the Secretaries of State, and particularly on such an occasion. Asks what support he is to expect.—Castletown. (No. 4.)

The enclosure, which is a letter to the Governor from Mr. Heywood, stating that Mr. Younger informed him that Mr. Betham had received a letter from Mr. Lutwidge, saying that the Governor had written to the Duke of Grafton, to the prejudice of Mr. Moore's present application to the Ministry, particularly with respect to his requests for trade, and that this letter was likewise communicated to Mr. Christian. Mr. Heywood soon after called on Mr. Christian to know the particulars, and was told that the above was true, that he had read Mr. Lutwidge's letter, which likewise intimated that the Governor's letter was laid before the Board of Treasury, and that what he said on the subject would not be much regarded. Mr. Christian seemed extremely concerned at this intelligence, and said that nothing but indisposition could prevent his waiting upon his Excellency upon it.—Dated from the "Nunnery," 8th March.

445. MR. SECRETARY CONWAY to the ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Sends a copy of a memorial lately received from Count Welderen, Envoy Extraordinary from the States General, as also of the papers therein referred to, containing accusations against a Mons. Van Teylingen, who was Governor of a Dutch settlement [Negapatnam on the coast of Coromandel] in the East Indies, of having defrauded their Company; and also a complaint against Mr. Polk, Governor of Madras, for having refused to deliver him to the Dutch deputies sent to Madras in pursuit of him. And as M. Van Teylingen is now in England, Count Welderen has received instructions from the States to desire that search may be made after him, and, if he should be found, that he may be detained till they can come to a resolution as to how to proceed against him. Desires him to take the whole of this matter into his consideration, and to report his opinion thereon.—St. James's.

Count Welderen's letter, and a full account of the escape in woman's clothes, the robberies, cruelties, &c. of this Christiaan Van Teylingen, formerly Governor of the Dutch establishment at Negapatnam, on the coast of Coromandel, and of his two accomplices (p. 122), Philippe Francis Harsz and Pierre Matthew Joell, and particulars of the pursuit (p. 127). 447. EARL OF SHELburnE to COMMODORE SPRY.

Acknowledging letters, and signifying His Majesty's approbation of his conduct in the negotiations, and particularly of the three additional articles concluded with the Emperor of Morocco. The King also approves of the proposal of appointing Mr. Jacob Benider Vice-consul at Sallee, at a salary of 100*l.* a year. His charges for the expedition to Algiers will be paid. The greatest economy must be practised, as the expenses for that service have constantly increased without adequate advantage. The King is pleased to honour him (Commodore Spry) with the same character to the Republic of Genoa as was borne by Commodore Harrison. This character, however, was first granted to Capt. Hervey, and on the express condition of no salary being annexed to it; nor is it His Majesty's intention to grant any extra allowance in consequence of it.—Whitehall. A draft. 3 pp.

sulage of five roubles for every ship belonging to them that shall pass the Sound, in conformity to the same sum granted to him by the Russia Company on all their ships loading at Petersburg and Narva. But as Mr. Fenwick represents that the advantage of this agreement falls far short of the intention, from his not being able to find a proper person to collect this consulage for him in the several ports of the Baltic within the King of Denmark's dominions, he begs that His Majesty would direct his Minister at Copenhagen to desire the King of Denmark to order his officers of the Sound Custom House to collect it for him, in the same manner as the Dutch consulage is collected from ships of that nation. Desires their Lordships to report their opinion as to Mr. Fenwick's request.

458. MR. SECRETARY CONWAY to GOVERNOR WOOD.

It was necessary for him to transmit to the Duke of Grafton a copy of his (Mr. Wood's) letter of the 5th Dec. last, as the object of it regarded principally the department of the Treasury; and he had the less scruple in making this communication, because the whole of it was open, and fair, and honest, and contained no sentiments but what had been previously and avowedly acknowledged by letter to Mr. Moore. If Mr. Lutwidge, therefore, has said that he received at the Treasury any other information to his (the Governor's) disadvantage, either his informer has been mistaken, or he himself has misunderstood it, or possibly the person to whom he wrote has taken his letter in a different sense from what he intended it. Wherever the mistake lies, it appears that no blame can justly be thrown on the Governor, nor any imputation which could render him the least obnoxious to the people under his government. It is true that Mr. Lutwidge has given in some proposal relative chiefly to the affairs of his Revenue department. That of the annexation forms no part of what he (Mr. Conway) has been informed of. Mr. Lutwidge declares that he has confined himself to such informations and propositions as he thought for the general advantage, without reference to anything the Governor had written or done; and for the rest, though Mr. Conway will be ready to report, and, in his department, to forward any salutary schemes he (Mr. Wood) may propose for the benefit of the Island, he doesn't think it possible to prevent hearing of such as may come through other channels, particularly those mentioned. $1\frac{3}{4}$ pp.

503. MR. SECRETARY CONWAY to the ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Encloses a copy of an anonymous letter lately received, in consequence of which he made some inquiries, and found the facts stated to be well founded in every particular but that of the two persons mentioned being Jesuits. They are said to be Roman Catholics, but not of that order, and have set up a school in the house described, for the education of youth and the advancement of their own religion. Desires an opinion as to what steps should be taken on the occasion.

The letter is also entered. It is signed "H. E.," and dated from Walsall, and states that Lord Viscount Dudley has let his house called Sedgley Park to two Jesuits, who have converted it into a seminary, and have already above 100 pupils. The affair makes a great noise in the country, as, under his Lordship's protection, they have grown sufficiently insolent; and, unless a stop be put to it, it will be attended with serious consequences.

Admiralty,
v. 156,
No. 25 a, b.516. COMMODORE SPRY to the EARL OF SHELBURNE.

Transmitting a letter from the Dey of Algier to His Majesty, and giving a detailed account of his proceedings at Algier. Upon a representation of the distressed condition of the Island of Minorea, his Highness was prevailed upon to allow two vessels from Mahon to load with corn, which was all he could possibly grant till the new corn came in. Was amazed to find that the presents given by his predecessors far exceeded what he brought from England for like purposes. Mr. Kirke said it was a custom which had crept in long before he came to Algier, and that he, the Commodore, would be obliged to comply with it, if he meant to do any business. All which he found to be too true; for when his secretary went with the Treasurer's present, who is the person next to the Dey, he told him he would receive it as coming from the King of England, but otherwise it was not worth his acceptance. The Aga, and the other great officers of the Court, being likewise out of humour at not having their customary presents of gold watches, he, the Commodore, had to promise to send one to each, before he could entertain the least hopes of doing any business. Having thus in some measure satisfied these people, and the Dey being highly pleased with his presents, he endeavoured at the next conference to establish an intercourse of trade with Gibraltar, and prevailed upon his Highness to issue orders to the Governors of 1767.

Zafarina and "Arasgon," two ports in the western part of his dominions, that in case any vessels should arrive there with letters from H.M.'s Governor of Gibraltar, demanding a supply of cattle and provisions, they should be allowed to load immediately, which could never be done without the express leave of the Dey. To this, however, his Highness would not bind himself by treaty. Remonstrated upon their cruising in sight of H.M.'s Mediterranean ports. A Spanish zebeque has been taken under the shelter of the Island of Minorca. The Emperor promises to pay his proportion, but they never give up what they have once possession of.

After detailing other negotiations, says he met with great difficulty in establishing Mr. Sampson in the consulate, as the Dey absolutely refused to receive him unless he gave the customary presents, and insisted on keeping Mr. Kirke; but after a great deal of altercation, and upon telling his Highness that the refusal of Mr. Sampson, and the detention of Mr. Kirke, would be looked upon as a declaration of war, he consented at the last audience to acknowledge him for three months, when he should expect the presents from him, or that some other Consul should be appointed. Finding it necessary that Mr. Kirke should be removed from Algier before his (the Commodore's) departure, he gave him every assistance to get away. Mr. Kirke sailed for Gibraltar at the same time he did for Mahon.

A circumstance that occurred during his stay at Algier sets in a strong light the disposition of the people. The Moors who inhabit the Atlas mountains which extend near east and west close to the back of the city, having been extremely oppressed and ill-treated, revolted, and refused to pay their annual tribute; upon which an army, commanded by the Aga in person, was sent out to compel them. The Moors suffered the Algerines to enter the mountains without resistance, but in the night attacked them with great success, and with great slaughter obliged them to retreat to their camp on the plains of Metidia. As soon as this news came to the Dey, he wrote privately to an officer in the camp, that it was God's will, and his own, that the Aga should be put to death immediately. This, though a difficult task, the officer and some of his friends succeeded in doing, by strangling him when they went to the Aga's tent, as customary, to kiss his hand and receive his orders for the night. The army was then ordered to disperse and the expedition laid aside for the year, without a Turk or Moor daring to open his lips about the matter. But should another misfortune happen on the back of this, most people think it would occasion a revolution, in which case the Dey himself would be the next to undergo the discipline of the bowstring or the scimitar, the majority of the people being by no means satisfied with the administration. To this event the Commodore attributes in part the ill-success of the negotiations, but altogether more to the cabals of the Treasurer and other Ministers than to the Dey himself and the present Aga, who appears to be less mercenary, and much better disposed towards the English, than the rest of the people in power.—Mahon Harbour.

526. EARL OF SHELburne to the LORD PRESIDENT OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

Encloses an account of the estaque duty of Minorea for 1766, and of the anchorage duty for the same year, transmitted by Lieut.-Governor Johnston, together with an extract from his letter relating to the same, to be laid before His Majesty.

The extract and accounts are entered, that of the anchorage duty on p. 151. Mr. Johnston sends the balance of the fund with the account of the stanque duty on brandy, but begs His Majesty to favour him with the balance, or some part of it. This indulgence he asks from the following reasons:—At the first establishment of this fund, in the time of Lieut.-Governor Kane, there was an agreement between him and the then magistrates of the Island (at whose solicitation he then applied for and obtained it) that one half of the fund should be appropriated for public works, till that time a burthen upon the community, and the other half for his own private emolument. But Mr. Kane, finding afterwards that the magistrates here made a very mischievous use of their share of this duty, took it again out of their hands, and employed it for such services as he judged most beneficial for the public.

So this duty remained till long after his death. In 1752, from a false representation made by the Minorquin syndics, the Court gave the whole of this duty to the magistrates. But the Ministry soon perceiving that this step, instead of remedying public evils and abuses, very considerably increased them, His Majesty in Council, Aug. 10, 1753, took this duty once more out of their hands, and put it again under the Lieut.-Governor's direction, ordering him to appoint a receiver, and also a receiver of the talla book; which he, Mr. Johnston, proposes doing this spring, as it will prevent much fraud and injustice, which too frequently pass in Minorca. The magistrates of the Island would very gladly and quietly have come into a compromise of giving him one half, and taking the other half themselves; but he did not think that he had any right to dispose of it to others, nor authority to appropriate any of it to his own use, without having His Majesty's warrant for so doing; though all his predecessors did appropriate the greater part of it, and some the whole to themselves, without any such sanction. He, however, excepts the balance for 1763 out of this rule; because that was a present made particularly to himself by the Marquis de Puysineux, the French Governor, and his predecessor, who might have carried away the whole sum if he had pleased. The chief point Mr. Johnston has in view in this matter is to act as agreeably as he can to His Majesty's will, and, nevertheless, not willingly to let his successors in his office suffer a loss in their emoluments by any negligence of his. And also, unless His Majesty grants this emolument, or some other in lieu of it, this Government will not be of half the value of that of Gibraltar, though the trouble of it is infinitely greater, the garrison equal, and the consequence of it not much inferior.

The Rev. Mr. Edw. Clarke was Mr. Johnston's agent, and Peter Mir and Theodore Alexiano, collectors of the stanque of brandy and anchorage respectively in Minorca. The total amount of the stanque was 1,009*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.*, and the balance 548*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.* The anchorage amounted to 90*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.*, and had a balance due or 16*s.* 1*d.*

very much owing to their being persuaded that he is not guilty, and that the witnesses on the trial were perjured. Needs not explain to his Lordship the situation one is in with voters of boroughs just before a general election, and how apt they are to fancy one has not done one's utmost if one fails of success in a point that they have set their hearts upon. Hopes this will be his excuse for troubling his Lordship with this second express, to explain how material it is for him (Mr. Morice), now that this William Pearce, who is above fourscore years, and condemned for stealing rope from the wreck of a ship, should have the same mercy from His Majesty that the other convict has had from the Judge.--Werington in Devonshire. 2 pp.

552. SALVAGE.

Channel Islands,
pcl. 14, No. 4.

Report of the Advocate General (Marriott) on the case of the "Joseph Marie," of Dunkirk. In this case the proprietors are entitled to have their property immediately delivered up to them by Mr. Bood, the King's naval officer and a salvor, who is represented to have the same in his custody, upon the owners at the same time paying the salvage. The proportion that the salvage dues bear to the value of cargoes is not fixed, but the law of the Admiralty (which is the general maritime law of all Europe) rates it according to the circumstances of distress and danger attending the saving. The difficulty in this case arises from Bood, the naval officer and a salvor, and the other salvors who were with him, insisting upon a sale of the cargo, and Bood going further, and insisting that he should be the seller and have five per cent. commission for the selling; whereas the owners are unwilling. Both these pretensions of Bood and the other salvors are unjust and without reason. Nobody can compel the owners to sell the goods; their value must be appraised. Gives his idea as to where Bood and the salvors got their notion of selling the cargo. The true reason, he supposes, why the owners do not choose to sell the cargo is that it would suit them better to run it into England. The reason which the memorialists give, viz., that the cargo would sell for more at Dunkirk, can hardly be true, unless in the above idea of smuggling. The true valuation of the cargo must be taken at the prices of the actual place where the will of Providence has thrown it. 2½ pp.

From Marseilles went to Naples. During his stay there three Turkish slaves swam on board the "Jersey" in the night, and claimed protection, and a fourth made his escape on board the "Montreal." The first that escaped was demanded by one of his Sicilian Majesty's officers; but he, the Commodore, refused to deliver him up, alleging that it was contrary to treaty, particularly as he had swum at least seven miles to the ship. Four Englishmen also came on board the "Jersey," and declared themselves deserters. Encloses copies of a letter from the Hon. William Hamilton, H.M.'s Plenipotentiary at Naples, stating that the Marquis Tanucci, his Sicilian Majesty's Secretary of State, had claimed them as deserters from Neapolitan regiments; and of his, the Commodore's, answer.

From Naples, proceeded to Genoa to deliver His Majesty's letter to the Doge of that Republic. On his arrival, hearing that the Duke of York was ill at Monaco, he lost no time in despatching the "Montreal" to his Royal Highness, and followed himself as soon as he had had an audience of the Doge. Got to Monaco on the night of the 16th. Immediately waited on his Royal Highness at the palace of the Prince of Monaco, but found him so ill of a miliary fever as to be quite insensible, and past all hopes of recovery, and the next morning he died. His Royal Highness was treated by the Prince, both before and after his death, with all the humanity, attention, and politeness imaginable. The same honours were paid to the remains by the good Prince as would have been shown to a Prince Royal of the blood of France on the like occasion.—[H.M.S.] "Jersey," in Villafranca Bay.

for life. But the circumstances of William Pearse's case are so abundantly worse as reported by the Judge, that His Majesty does not think himself at liberty to extend the same mercy to him. Since his Lordship has been in office, it has been His Majesty's invariable rule to pay the greatest regard to the opinion of the Judges, not having, to his Lordship's knowledge, differed in any one case from it. The reason and justice of it must be clear, since, on the one hand, it is highly reasonable that country convicts should have the same chance as those of the capital, whose cases are always reported by the Recorder. On the other hand, after trial, sentence, and reconsideration by the Judge, it is highly expedient that justice should take place, for the good of the community, on whichever side it appears. In the present case the inhumanity of plundering the distressed, and increasing the calamities of the unfortunate, are circumstances mentioned in the Judge's report, which do not leave this unhappy man an object of His Majesty's clemency. Has received the petition, addressed to Genl. Conway and himself; and Genl. Conway's sentiments agreeing with his own, asks him, Mr. Morice, to inform the gentlemen who have signed it (most of whom his Lordship has the honour of knowing personally, and to whose application in any matter of favour he would be proud to show the greatest regard) of His Majesty's determination, and Mr. Conway's and his Lordship's concern on so unhappy a case.—A copy. 3 pp.

568. The SAME to the LORDS OF TRADE.

Transmitting for their consideration copies of several memorials and petitions from merchants trading from hence to N. America, or residing in the colonies, setting forth the present state of the Indian trade, and representing the necessity of some new regulation.

In regard to the enormous expenses of N. America, arising in great measure from the present manner of managing Indian affairs by the intervention of superintendents, who have a power of drawing for such sums as they shall judge expedient, as well as from the number of forts existing ever since the late war, and the distant stations in which the troops have remained for want of any regular plan having been adopted since the peace, their Lordships are to state their opinion how far the appointment of superintendents remains longer necessary, their first institution being supposed to be chiefly, if not solely, for the purpose of a general union of the colonies, under His Majesty's immediate direction, to resist the encroachment of the French at the beginning of the last war; or how far it may be proper to strengthen the hands of these officers, who are independent both of the civil and military power, agreeably to their repeated applications. But as the regulations imposed by the superintendents are asserted in the petitions rather to clog the trade with useless and vexatious restrictions than to remove evils complained of, and as the Governors of several of the colonies do not keep up a regular correspondence with these officers, paying little or no regard to the rules laid down by them, if their Lordships should think their further continuance unnecessary, they will then state their opinion as to the proper method to intrust both the trade and management of the Indians to the care of the colonies themselves, leaving them to pass laws which shall be adapted to the circumstances of the respective provinces, which shall in course be sent over for His Majesty's approbation or otherwise, the provinces defraying whatever expense they may judge necessary for their own security against Indian incursions. Also, the several forts now maintained, serving solely as a barrier against the Indians, they are to consider whether most of them may not be reduced, and others of them entrusted to the provinces themselves, still preserving the necessary communications by means of a few forts remaining in the hands of H.M.'s troops on the great lakes and rivers which lead from Canada to the Mississippi and the frontiers of New York, and which, with a small number of vessels to command the navigation, may answer every intention of Government.

Referring also to their Lordships extracts from several letters from Sir J. Amherst and Genl. Gage, recommending the establishment of further new governments on the Mississippi, the Ohio, and at Detroit, at one or more of which places a considerable body of French have been suffered to remain since the peace without any form of government; also different proposals from private people for undertaking establishments in those parts. The arguments in favour of these settlements are the securing of the fur and peltry trade to His Majesty's subjects, preventing smuggling with the French and Spaniards, now amounting to so considerable a sum annually as to become a national object; the promotion of the great object of population, and increase of the demand for British manufactures, particularly by affording to the Americans an opportunity of following their natural bent for the cultivation of land, and offering a convenient occupation for their superfluous hands, who, otherwise, might be forced into manufactures to rival the mother country; the raising of provisions; and the protection of the old provinces by forming of themselves an exterior line of defence, and keeping the Indians in awe. The savages, who are hemmed in by our settlements on both sides, must either become domiciliated and reconciled to our laws and manners, or be obliged to retire to a distance.

His Lordship sends all the papers which can furnish any lights in these matters, which, with the materials in their office, examinations of merchants, and such of H.M.'s military servants as have been in America, will enable their Lordships to present their report.

At the same time (when these are exhausted) he has no doubt but the plan adopted will sufficiently answer the intention of Government. After a delay of nigh three years, and now that a fund is allotted, he hopes the desire of having his appointments at least fixed will not appear unreasonable. v. 431, No. 12.593. The SAME to the SAME.

Has had several conferences with the servants of the Crown and those supposed to have the leading interest in this kingdom, and has met with a very general disposition to promote the King's service in everything which he can with certainty represent to be His Majesty's pleasure. The recommendation made to Parliament to secure the judges in their offices during good behaviour hath met with universal approbation. He called together the three chief judges and the principal servants of the law, previous to forming the speech to Parliament, and by their advice avoided touching upon the increase of the number or salaries of the judges. This advice seemed to arise partly out of a delicacy to themselves, but more from an apprehension that from hence an opportunity might be taken in the House of Commons by the Opposition to raise suspicions that this step was chiefly calculated to increase the value of the office of Chancellor, in order to tempt some men of eminence in England to accept the seals. Is in great hope, however, that some independent person will move this session to have the number and salaries of the judges increased. The general uneasiness in men's minds that a Chancellor has not yet been appointed, and the disgust conceived by many from thinking it to be a settled point never to give the seals to a native of this country, are stronger than he represented them whilst in England. Is assured that it is owing to the attention and temper of Mr. Attorney General that a motion was not lately made in the House of Commons to lay before the King the great inconveniences that must arise from not appointing a Chancellor; and if the seals are not soon disposed of, it may perhaps be impossible hereafter to resist such a motion, which might be the beginning of much ill-humour between the two countries. Has opened confidentially to many persons here the favourable disposition there is in the King and his servants to reconsider the question of a Bill for limiting the duration of Parliaments. Heartily wishes he had been authorized to speak out on this important subject. Has, from his first landing, endeavoured to find out the real sentiments of men of weight upon the subject of the augmentation of the army to three or four thousand men, and to obtain their support for the measure, which ought to be brought before the House of Commons as early as possible. The Money Bill will otherwise be hurried through, the surplus disposed of in jobs under the pretence of improvements, and the Committee of Supply closed. From the conversations already had, is not without hopes that this augmentation may be brought about, though all men avoid positively engaging themselves till he can say with precision what security is to be given that 12,000 men shall for the future remain in Ireland. Earnestly requests, therefore, that the absolute determination of the King and his servants upon this point may be communicated by express. Imagines that the true reason why people speak with reserve in regard to it is, that this augmentation will be the means of withdrawing a very considerable sum "from the purposes of supporting private interests," besides, perhaps, at the same time, forcing in a militia, which will be a great additional expense. Is inclined to believe, however, that a strong letter, expressing His Majesty's earnest wishes for this augmentation, and commanding him, in all his recommendations for favours, to attend particularly to such persons as shall be assisting in it, might enable him to obtain the consent of Parliament to this measure,—early attention being likewise paid in Great Britain to the Act of King William, with regard to the number of forces allowed to be kept up in Ireland. Hoped to have received by the first messenger the final determination of the King's servants relative to the Bill for limiting the duration of Parliaments, and also depended for having His Majesty's orders as to pensions for life or years, and reversions. Is very impatient to receive this despatch, because the more he is enabled to resist solicitation, though some, he fears, must at last be given way to, and the more he is authorized to speak out, the better able he will be to execute His Majesty's commands with expedition and success.

His Majesty is very much surprised at not receiving before now a particular account of the state in which his Excellency has found things in Ireland; and as there was not time for him to send over a draft of his speech for His Majesty's approbation, the King expected he would have wrote a particular letter containing his reasons in explanation of it. His Excellency will, upon reflection, be sensible how much the King's servants must have been astonished to find mention made, in the King's name, of his having it in charge from His Majesty to recommend a provision to secure the judges in their offices during good behaviour, as it was expressly contrary to the opinion of the Lords who met at the Lord President's the evening before his departure, when, at the same time that they approved the measure, upon full consideration of his Excellency's proposal to mention it in his speech, did, for very material reasons, recommend it to him rather to make use of general words, leaving it to him in private conversation to acquaint such persons as he should judge it to be for His Majesty's service to talk confidentially with, of the determination of the King's servants to support in Council the Septennial Bill and the judges for life, and to hear with a favourable disposition whatever should be offered towards the forming of a Militia and Habeas Corpus Act, concerning which no other difficulty presented itself than that peculiar to Ireland from the number of Roman Catholics. He must, then, easily conceive how impatient His Majesty as well as his servants must be to know what reason could possibly induce him to mention so particularly the second point, that of the judges for life, after being in person apprized of the opinion of the King's Cabinet servants, and their reasons for it. It is also much wished that he had not made so strong a declaration of his desire to exclude all foreigners from a share in any article of the linen trade, since he may remember it was the principal objection to the Bill that passed the last sessions of Parliament, that foreign nations would be alarmed by it to such a degree as to induce them to lay fresh duties on the woollen trade of England, which it might not be able to bear. His Majesty is, however, persuaded that he has not neglected to apprise, in the most explicit manner, his chief servants, and such persons as his Excellency shall have judged proper, of the plan for the new regulation for the army, and of the share of it which His Majesty expects Ireland to bear. The design itself of setting the infantry in every part of the British dominions upon the same establishment is so wise, and the benefit which will arise to Ireland by their troops not being liable to be weakened by frequent draughts is so obvious, and at the same time their proportion of paying six regiments on foreign stations so equitable, which leaves their share of the general burden so light in comparison of the benefit they receive, that it is scarce possible to conceive the least objection should arise to such a proposal at any time, particularly when his Excellency is gone over apprized as well of His Majesty's constant regard to the welfare of Ireland, as of his present favourable disposition upon points which have been so long and so eagerly desired by the people of that kingdom. He will perceive that the King's answer to the House of Commons is drawn up with the view to convey his gracious inclinations in terms as strong as the occasion would properly admit of, at the same time that he expects a cheerful and unanimous compliance in the grant of such supplies as shall be asked of them, both for the support of Government and for the public safety, which last expression alludes to the plan the King put into his hands himself, nothing further being meant by it.

Has just received his private letter of the 29th past. 602. The SAME to the SAME.

It now becomes him to answer his Lordship's letter of the 29th past very fully, as it contains a most heavy charge against him in every part of his conduct since his arrival. Will do it with all the duty and submission due to His Majesty, to whom he insists upon his Lordship's immediately communicating his defence.

Did, as soon as he could with any degree of certainty, send for His Majesty's information a very particular account of what appeared to be the true state of affairs in this kingdom; and is convinced that when His Majesty considers how very late he was appointed, and that he did not arrive until the 14th ult., His Majesty will be of opinion that he could not have formed any tolerable idea of this kingdom, and the weight of different persons in it, sooner than the 27th, when a very explicit dispatch was sent.

In forming his speech to Parliament, he conducted himself by what he remembered to have been the King's gracious inclination towards Ireland, and from what appeared by the minutes taken at the Councils on the 7th and 8th of October to have been "the universal sense of all His Majesty's servants" then present. His Lordship will observe that the only thing he mentions to have in charge from His Majesty is that provision be made for securing the Judges in the enjoyment of their offices and appointments during good behaviour, which is less than the minute of the 7th, because he says nothing of an augmentation, and not more than the minute of the 8th, which says, "the Septennial Bill and the Judges for life, with augmentation, &c., approved of, if found convenient by the Lord Lieutenant." His Lordship must likewise remember that the Lord Chancellor, who was very explicit on the 7th, was not present on the 8th. This being the case, did not apprehend it would be necessary to enter into any explanation of the speech, but did transmit, as was usual, a copy of it on the day of its delivery. When his Lordship comes to reflect on what passed at these Councils, and to read over with attention the minutes alluded to, he will be convinced that his Excellency's authority on the 7th was absolute, and on the 8th discretionary. And if his Lordship had considered the detriment to His Majesty's affairs arising from the uncertainty of the instruction, he would rather have found an opportunity of commending than reprimanding the use of that discretion.

Cannot, surely, be expected to have had in view the objections of particular persons to the Act which passed last Session of Parliament, for prohibiting the importation of French lawns and cambrics. But the law passed; and the clause enclosed, marked A., will show that if French cambrics and lawns are not effectually prevented from being brought into Ireland, the people of this kingdom will, after the 24th June 1768, be prohibited from sending any manufacture of that sort into Great Britain; and his Lordship must recollect that a cambric manufacture has been long established here under the protection and encouragement of Parliament, for which reason he thought he could not too strongly enforce what the Legislature of Great Britain and the policy of this kingdom seemed to demand.

Hopes His Majesty will believe that nothing could have made him neglect for one moment the explaining and enforcing the plan communicated by the King himself for a new regulation of the army; but thought it unnecessary to make professions of zeal, best shown by the effects produced by his earnest endeavours.

Accordingly, in his despatch of the 27th past, he informed his Lordship that he was not without hopes of obtaining an augmentation full as considerable as that which His Majesty wished for, the expense whereof will amount annually to about 40,000*l.*, and in the first year to 67,000*l.* Very soon found that the reserve met with on that point, and which he attributed to certain other reasons, had a much deeper foundation; for those who were best acquainted with the state of the revenue were of opinion that in fact the country was not able to bear such an additional expense. Upon examination, he found these opinions too well grounded. This put him upon searching for various methods of supplying the expense without any new aggressive taxes; and for this purpose he has suggested the increasing the revenue by lowering the duty upon tea, and by raising a tax of 4*s.* in the pound upon absentee placemen and pensioners. These, with such a reduction of parliamentary grants as could in prudence be made, he thought would have been sufficient; but had the mortification to find, at a very general meeting held last Monday evening, that it was the unanimous opinion of all present, that, from the state of the national debt, which appears to be greatly increasing, it would be dangerous to attempt an augmentation of more than 2,000 private men; nor would any one advise him to let even this be proposed in Parliament, until he could with certainty say what security His Majesty would give that 12,000 should be constantly resident in Ireland; for which reason it was recommended to be submitted to the King and his servants, whether, upon an address from the House of Commons, His Majesty would give such an assurance. Transmits, in order to justify these apprehensions, a state of the revenue for four years past, with a short account of the national debt, and an explanatory paper annexed.

If anything could have enabled him to carry on the King's affairs with better success, it would have been a punctuality on the part of his Lordship in informing him, in the first place, of His Majesty's determination with respect to a Chancellor; and, in the next, of the final resolution of His Majesty's servants with regard to the Septennial Bill; and, lastly, of His Majesty's pleasure with regard to pensions for lives or years, and reversions.

Heads of a Bill for the limitation of Parliaments were moved the first day of the session, but no step has been since taken, owing to the absence of several members who are attending upon contested elections. The Habeas Corpus and Militia Bills have not hitherto been mentioned in Parliament, though they are certainly to be moved and much pressed. How they ought to be received depends upon their being properly framed, which, in the present state of the country, will be very difficult.

The expressions in his Lordship's letter are so strong that they appear little less than an arraignment; and for this reason he must insist on this his defence being laid before His Majesty, who, he hopes, will think it a full answer to every charge. If not, he must with all submission request to be recalled from a government in which it seems impossible for him to continue with advantage to His Majesty or satisfaction to himself.—Dublin Castle.

The enclosures. From these accounts it appears that, notwithstanding the reduction of the forces in 1763, and an increased revenue in the two years to Lady Day 1765, from the large importation of spirits and other merchandize on the peace, and the keeping of all extraordinary expenses as low as possible, in order to avoid raising money on the vote of credit of 1763, the produce was barely sufficient to defray the charge of the two years, and that in the succeeding two years, the revenue falling short and the extraordinary expense increasing, the debt of the nation was augmented by 73,089*l.* 17*s.* 11³/₄*d.* 16 pp.

605. The SAME to the SAME.

His Majesty extremely approves of his early attention in talking to His Majesty's servants, and to the principal persons in Ireland, upon an augmentation of the army. Recounts the reason of the necessity for, and the benefits to arise from, this measure; and has no doubt that, in the light of the general disposition represented to exist, to promote the King's service, he will find a cheerful concurrence of the King's servants and principal men of property to support this measure. Has, therefore, nothing more to add on this head, than that His Majesty was unanimously advised to give every assurance of 12,000 men remaining in that kingdom, as far as is consistent with the safety of both kingdoms in case of any sudden or extraordinary emergency. Consequently his Excellency must proceed in sounding the opinions of the principal interests in Ireland, and transmits his opinion how far the success of this measure may be relied on. As no parliamentary step can be taken in Ireland till an Act is passed here to remove the restraint imposed by the Act of the 10th of King William, all he can do, further than sounding the principal persons in regard to it, will be to take proper care that in respect to parliamentary business the way to this measure be kept clearly open, and that no engagement be entered into in connection with public money which can interfere in any way with this important object. In regard to the Bill for limiting the duration of Parliaments, has only to repeat the determination of the King's servants to support it in Council, as well as to hear with a favourable disposition whatever shall be offered towards forming a Militia and Habeas Corpus Act, concerning which no other difficulty suggests itself than that peculiar to Ireland from the number of Roman Catholics; and to suggest that it will be necessary to have it for eight years instead of seven, to avoid the confusion attending a general election in both kingdoms the same year, as well as that the even number is more adapted to Ireland on account of the Parliament there meeting every two years only.

As to the uneasiness in respect to a Chancellor not being yet appointed, arising from a surmise that it is a settled point never to give the seals to a native of Ireland;—besides that no such exclusion has ever been thought of, it is scarce possible to conceive that a suspicion so ill-grounded, and which so directly tends to reflect on His Majesty's care of his people of Ireland, should be the foundation of a motion in the House of Commons at a time when His Majesty's regard for them is so strongly manifested by His attention to promote the administration of justice, as well as to every point which can advance their welfare and happiness. Nor is it possible, were such an address to pass, to say what effect it might have upon His Majesty's present most favourable disposition. He may, however, acquaint him (the Lord Lieutenant) that he will shortly be able to inform him of a proper person being fixed on.

Has the pleasure to convey His Majesty's approbation of the zeal which his Excellency professes in his service, and to signify that he will never want the King's support in all proper instances; but, at the same time, has to acquaint him that His Majesty, in regard to the granting of pensions for life or years, or reversions, perseveres in his resolution to allow him to declare to the principal members of both Houses, that, unless for weighty and important reasons, and under particular circumstances, of which His Majesty is the only judge, it is not his intention to grant any pension for life or years, or any places in reversion; and that neither His Excellency, nor any of the King's servants here, do intend to recommend any such grants.

taken out of an English ship at sea, as it cannot be questioned that the British colours ought to protect every free person on board, of whatever nation, and the contrary practice would occasion endless searches and examinations contrary to treaties. But if they were the property of the Algerines before their escape it would very much alter the question. As to the presents for the Dey's officers, as experience shows that their demands are always rising, and are encouraged by giving way to them, it is His Majesty's pleasure that, for the future, the distributors of his presents should keep within the sum he has thought proper to allow. His Majesty approves of the protection given to the deserters who returned to their colours. Suggests that the Turks mentioned by him, if they should be Levant Turks, should be sent to the Dey, in case they are willing to enter into his service, as he complained that there were only one Levant Turk and three Moors, instead of four Levant Turks, as he expected, returned in the place of the Spaniards. Mr. Fraser has received a caution that His Majesty expects all persons acting under his commission to behave with a proper degree of respect and decency towards the powers to whom they are commissioned, without assuming a dictatorial language, which is more calculated to irritate than to promote the interest of their master. He (the Commodore) is to pay Adams and Co., at Santa Cruz, for the redemption of the "Pitt's" crew.

Received his letter of the 5th on Tuesday evening, the 10th inst. The packet sailed again at 12 the same night, and there has since been no packet on this side.

The two great obstacles to the augmentation are the state of the revenue of the country, and the jealousy which may arise in the breasts of the advocates of the militia that this measure is meant to preclude the latter. Whenever the augmentation shall be again touched upon in Parliament, or the militia proposed, care may be taken to remove this suspicion, especially since he is authorized to make known the favourable disposition of His Majesty's servants to a Militia and Habeas Corpus Act. Nor will he omit to do the same with the Septennial Bill whenever such a communication may dispose the minds of men to support the augmentation of the troops. However, a communication of these sentiments may not have that extensive influence in favour of the measure which his Lordship seems to expect. Had it been judged expedient to communicate His Majesty's favourable disposition towards a Septennial Bill in the speech, it would have carried an authority to the people in general, and acquired a popularity to Government, which might have probably carried through the augmentation without any material opposition. When it is recollected how frequently a Septennial Bill has been rejected, and that it was returned last year when the Lord Lieutenant countenanced it, it will possibly be seen why the hopes which a Chief Governor may give do not bear the same authority as a recommendation from the Crown. Will, nevertheless, as directed, apply this communication of the sentiments of the King's servants where it is certain to promote his service, and wishes most heartily that it may be as much in his power, as it is in his inclination, to prevail, so that His Majesty's kindness to his subjects, and the points he has at heart, may go hand in hand.

May be right to state that the augmentation of the troops was so generally understood from the words in the speech, "trusting " at the same time to your wisdom and zeal to make further pro- " visions, if the necessary support of Government and the safety " of this country shall require it;" or, perhaps, likewise from the language he held with those whom he had consulted upon it, that on the 6th a debate arose upon this very subject in the House of Commons. It was opened by Mr. Perry, who endeavoured to call upon Lord Frederick to speak the sense of Government upon this point; and a question was proposed, such as would have declared the sense of Parliament in favour of a militia as the only effectual security for the country. The necessity of an augmentation was avowed by Lord Frederick; the incompatibility of it with a militia denied. He was supported by the King's servants, and the question was defeated for that time.

Will be equally attentive to prevent any motions on the subject of a Chancellor's not being appointed, on which he is still more anxious, if possible, since the receipt of his Lordship's last express, mentioning not only the ungracious appearance it would wear, but also the bad effects it might have on His Majesty's service in this country. It is impossible to prevent the conclusions mankind will draw from so long a suspension of filling this office. Confesses that his anxiety has greatly increased since the courts have sat, without business, in the view of Parliament, where the principal members are of the profession of the law, and in general most independent. Is assured that it is owing to Lord Annaly and Mr. Attorney General that two motions in Parliament, upon the situation of the courts, have been prevented. Has explained to the other servants of the Crown, and to the principal persons, how ill received any steps of this kind must be in England at a time when His Majesty's regard to the people of Ireland has been manifested by his attention to promote the administration of justice, as well as to every point that can advance the welfare and interests of his people. Will convey some particulars in a more private despatch.

P.S.—With regard to the keeping open parliamentary business so that no engagement may interfere with the augmentation of the army, the Money Bill must be carried through the House of Commons and pass the Council here before the end of this month, or there will be great danger of its not being returned to Ireland time enough to be passed into a law before the 25th Dec., when the present Bill granting the additional duties expires. The Committee of Supply is always closed when that of the Ways and Means opens; and the alarms that would be raised if an attempt was made to keep it open longer would, he is advised, be dangerous in the highest degree. With regard to the engagements for public money, he has not countenanced any one proposal. Many persons of the greatest weight have promised to do all they can to restrain these grants; but the petitions are so numerous, and so many members are mutually interested in forcing through their respective grants, that he very much fears no great saving will be made.—Dublin Castle. Marked "Secret and confidential." 8 pp.

618. MR. SECRETARY CONWAY to the LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF SESSION.

Mr. Thos. Gordon, who has a commission from the States General, regularly approved by His Majesty, to act as their agent in Scotland, has complained to Count Welderen, the Dutch Minister residing here, of the injustice as well as cruel usage met with from some persons acting under the Vice-Admiralty Court, while in the execution of his duty, and desired the Count to make a proper representation to the Secretary of State. As Mr. Gordon has now a process depending before the Court of Session with the above-mentioned persons, it is unnecessary for him, Mr. Conway, to enter into further particulars, as they will be fully laid before his Lordship, when there cannot be the smallest doubt that the strictest justice will be done. But if it shall appear that Mr. Gordon has met with the ill-treatment he represents, it is His Majesty's pleasure that the offenders should be prosecuted according to law. Desiring also a state of the case to satisfy the Dutch Minister.

619. EARL OF SHELBURNE to MAJOR GENERAL GAGE.

Signifying His Majesty's approbation of his conduct. His answers to the points under consideration, confidentially communicated to him, have been also very satisfactory. The King has referred to the Lords of Trade and Plantations the consideration of the establishment of new governments on the Ohio and Mississippi, and at Detroit; likewise how far the reduction of the forts occupied by H.M.'s troops may affect the Indian trade; as also the consequences of entrusting the management of Indian affairs to the respective colonies under certain general restrictions.

The enormous expense attending the present method of supplying the troops cantoned in the back settlements and frontier posts of North America, with the heavy contingent charges arising from the transportation of stores, and the danger to which the discipline of the army is exposed by the regiments being broken up into small detachments, have all been very often and justly represented in his, the Major General's, letters. By establishing governments where provisions, &c. may be furnished on the spot, half the posts now kept up will be unnecessary; while the remainder may be partly transferred to the care of the several provinces, and partly maintained at a much less expense. The illicit trade with the French and Spaniards will be in a great measure cut off, as the goods must be intercepted by our traders; the Indians will be prevented from incursions into the back settlements; precise and definite boundaries will be put to the old colonies; the trade and manufactures of Great Britain will be extended into the remotest Indian nations, and such posts only will be required to be garrisoned as command the different Indian communications or the intercourse between the colonies by the great rivers and lakes. These are the principal points at present under deliberation with regard to the colonies. The quit rents and grants of land will next be taken into consideration.

His Majesty approves of the attention given to Don Anthonio de Ulloa at New Orleans. He cannot be too narrowly watched.

Instructions have been sent to the Lieutenant-Governor of Virginia to complete the boundary line between that province and the western Indians, in the same manner as it has been run by the provinces of South and North Carolina, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. Governor Carleton has been directed to keep a watchful eye on the Jesuits, who have been represented as endeavouring to send part of their effects and moveables clandestinely to Italy. Governor Grant has established a post by land between the provinces of East and West Florida. Governor Wright, of Georgia, has written that the magazines of that province are full of gunpowder, no less than 1,100 barrels having arisen from the duty imposed upon all ships which enter at the Custom House. He has desired leave to assent to a law for the commutation of this duty into money, until circumstances render it necessary to collect it again in kind; and recommends (the magazines being small and ill-constructed) that a part of the stock should be sold.—Whitehall. However, to avoid any mistake, begs to be further informed whether it is not understood by the communication of His Majesty's commands relative to pensions for life or years, and reversions, that, notwithstanding His Majesty's resolution to discourage applications for grants of this nature, yet, should there appear in the course of endeavours to carry on his business a time particularly critical when it may greatly contribute to the success of any leading point which His Majesty may have at heart (as, for instance, the present augmentation of the army), he may in such case be permitted to lay before the King what shall appear so immediately to interest his service. Mankind judge pretty well how to time their requests. Since the general idea of the augmentation in this country, has had full reason to know it. And, as so large a share of the principal offices and emoluments have not been disposed of in this country, it may be thought probable that he (the Lord Lieutenant) should hear of this circumstance when the Crown is known to have any particular object in view. It may be expedient for His Majesty's service (when such interesting points as the present, and others which may arise from the Opposition, come forward, and men of the first abilities are forming expectations,) that he may be permitted to transmit their wishes, without loss of time, for His Majesty's decision.—Dublin Castle. Marked "Secret and separate." $2\frac{1}{2}$ pp.

623. The SAME to the SAME.

Had scarcely finished his despatches of the 13th, when a very unexpected and important matter arose, which obliges him to hire a vessel on purpose, lest public rumour, forerunning his information, should make him appear negligent in the King's service. Yesterday morning, Mr. Attorney General, to his Excellency's great astonishment, came to say, that, besides an address relative to the vacancy of the Seals, which might perhaps be carried, he had certain intelligence that a motion would be made in the House of Commons to grant the supply from three months to three months, or, as they term it here, a short Money Bill; the ground for which motion, he said, was the very general discontent which had been long gaining ground amongst all ranks of people throughout the kingdom, and which was now brought to a point by depriving the country of the usual course of justice in not appointing a Chancellor. By which means the business of that Court did not proceed, whilst the attendance of the Common Law Judges there put a stop to the proceedings in the other courts. He (the Attorney General) said, likewise, that, whatever might be the consequence of such a step, he was afraid that the discontent at this time was too general to resist such a question with success; but that Lord Shannon and Mr. Speaker, who knew the temper and numbers of the House of Commons better than he did, would more fully inform his Excellency on this point. They soon afterwards confirmed everything Mr. Attorney had said. His Excellency used every argument to encourage them to resist such an ill-timed indignity to the King, and a blow which would be so fatal to the welfare of this country. They said that, whatever their own opinions might be, they were convinced, if such a motion were made at this time, it would be carried. They urged the same arguments which Mr. Attorney had stated were very generally used by members of the House of Commons; and said that, day after day, as gentlemen had come to Parliament from the country, this discontent had increased to such a degree as to make it impossible now to resist the torrent. Nor, as additional expenses would certainly be proposed for the army, and perhaps for a national militia, would gentlemen be induced to grant any supplies that were to continue, until they knew the utmost of the sums which would be wanted; the more so as they thought this was the only certain method they had of obtaining those popular Bills, which had been so often demanded and so constantly refused. This seemed so very different from all that had passed before, and so unaccountable, that he summoned the very next instant as general a meeting as he could in so short a time, of His Majesty's principal servants. There were present at this meeting, held last night at nine o'clock, the following; viz.,

|----------------------|----------------------|
| The Primate. | Lord Dungannon. |
| Lord Shannon. | Lord Newton. |
| The Speaker. | Prime Serjeant. |
| Mr. Clements. | Attorney General. |
| Sir Henry Cavendish. | Solicitor General. |
| Mr. Malone. | Mr. Serjeant Dennis. |
| The Provost. | Mr. Serjeant Lill. |

Having called upon them all to state their opinion what was necessary to be done with regard to the information received, Lord Shannon and Mr. Speaker repeated very fully what they had said in the morning, and that, having consulted with their friends, they were obliged to say that it was not in their power to resist such a measure, if proposed in the House of Commons. Mr. Malone, who, except the Provost, was the only person not immediately in the service of the Crown, gave his opinion strongly as to the impropriety of this measure, which, he said, would be the highest indignity to the Crown, and of the utmost danger to the public. He was very warmly and very explicitly supported in this by Lord Annaly, Mr. Solicitor General, Lord Dungannon, Sir Henry Cavendish, Mr. Clements, and Mr. Serjeant Lill. My Lord Primate did not speak upon the occasion. Mr. Provost seemed to think this measure very dangerous, but fell into what was the general sense of all the other persons present, which was to take time until next Tuesday morning to consider whether it ought in propriety at this time to be resisted, and, if it should, what was the probability of success. It is impossible for his Excellency to express his surprise at finding himself in the midst of the King's servants, and hearing a question of this sort treated by a part of them in this manner, and so late a day pressed for the further consideration of a measure which ought to have been rejected with indignation.

As he found that the vacancy of the Seals, and an apprehension that the popular Bills would be again refused, were now combined to form a pretence for this extraordinary proposition, his Excellency urged in the strongest manner the favourable disposition of the King's servants towards them, and the information relating to a Chancellor contained in his Lordship's letter of the 5th. Nor will he hesitate to extend this communication further to such considerable persons with whom it may weigh on this occasion. Can never think that the independent men in Parliament, and the several great interests, can concur in so extravagant a measure. Will use his utmost endeavours to obtain the grant of supply.—Dublin Castle. Marked "Secret and confidential." 6½ pp.

624. The SAME to the SAME.

Lord Shannon has just been with him to say that Mr. Ponsonby and he had prevailed upon their friends to desist from the motion described in yesterday's despatch, being determined that nothing which might carry the least appearance of disrespect to the King should take place; but that, nevertheless, an inquiry into the state of the nation might yet be taken up in the present situation of things. He informed his Lordship that he was glad to hear a business so extremely disagreeable was laid aside; that he hoped nothing of a similar nature would follow it, especially as His Majesty had received from hence a state of this country relative to its ability to support the augmentation, to which he (the Lord Lieutenant) had not had a reply; and that it deserved well to be considered if the King's servants in England had not given, in their despatch communicated to his Lordship, all the satisfaction which the nature of the case and the constitution of Great Britain would permit. Lord Annaly came early yesterday morning to declare on his part and that of his friends against this motion of the Money Bill. Mr. Prime Serjeant, whose abilities and knowledge are of the first rank in this country, did the same this morning, and so has the Provost.

Has ever been cautious in entering into any engagement to recommend persons to His Majesty before he has seen the event of the measures in this country; but submits whether it may not, after this critical and unexpected event, contribute to the future success of his measures, if some of those who stood early and firmly against this torrent should receive some marks of his Royal favour.

Is in hopes that if he can but ward off or prevent an address relative to the Courts of Judicature, and can satisfy the minds of the people that the Bill for limitation of Parliaments would be returned, such a temper might then prevail as would carry His Majesty's wishes into execution. Is heartily sorry to dwell upon this subject, much more to be told that those strong expressions contained in his (Lord Shelburne's) last despatch regarding this point (and which have been fully communicated) have not carried the entire satisfaction to be expected from them. But as he sees there is something that strangely embarrasses the King's service, and that the avowed cause is the apprehension that this Septennial Bill will, like many former, not be returned with the Money Bill, for which so many gentlemen have pledged themselves and their interests to the general expectation of the country, fears it would be unpardonable to omit the information, and to request earnestly of the King's servants, after what has already passed, some further assurance upon this head, if the nature of things will in prudence admit of it; and the more speedily, as he is assured that the fixing the confidence of the people on this point is the likeliest means of carrying into execution His Majesty's intentions respecting the augmentation.—Dublin Castle. Marked "Secret and confidential." 4 pp.

Not being able to get any vessel to carry over the several despatches received herewith, has now an opportunity, by the return of the packet, to inform his Lordship that at the meeting which was held this Tuesday morning, Lord Shannon and Mr. Speaker stated that they had been able to persuade their friends to lay aside the motion intended for a short Money Bill, as it might be liable to an interpretation of an indignity to the Crown. Had the pleasure to find that the whole meeting was unanimous that, this being the case, Mr. Longfield's motion would be very easily rejected. Is not without hopes that what they have said will be the case,—as he has just been informed by Lord Frederick, who is this instant returned from the House, that upon a motion made by Sir Lucius O'Brien to address His Majesty relative to the vacancy of the Seals, the same was, upon the previous question being put, passed in the negative, 78 to 32; and this great majority was chiefly owing to Lord Shannon and the Speaker's friends assisting the servants of the Crown, who, to do them the justice they deserve, did most of them speak, and all vote, against the motion for an address.—Dublin Castle. Marked "Secret and confidential." 2 pp.

Ireland,
v. 431, No. 32.

627. EARL OF SHELburnE to the LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND.

There have been two meetings of the King's servants to consider his letter of the 5th inst., in answer to the private letter of the 29th Oct. Is first to acquaint him that the paper, of which his Excellency transmits a copy; as a minute given him by Mr. Conway, could have been nothing more than his private notes, containing his particular sense at that time upon the subjects then under consideration,—not only as these subjects did not fall within Mr. Conway's department, but as the paper is not in the form of a minute. Nor was it, according to the indispensable custom of those meetings, read over to the Lords present, to know whether it expressed their sentiments as they wished them to be laid before His Majesty. There must have been a mistake in supposing it to have been "the universal sense of all His Majesty's servants," as some of the Lords present declare that they then expressed a contrary opinion. Mr. Conway, indeed, remembers that he had at one time that opinion, but that he afterwards saw reason to concur with the rest of His Majesty's servants. The meeting on the next day of the Lords then left in town was to consider of the inconveniences (suggested over night, but not then discussed for want of time, and, having been the subject of general conversation between them at court, mentioned that morning to the King,) that might arise from mentioning any of the proposed Bills in the speech, as having it in command from His Majesty to do so, on account of the constitution of Ireland, which requires that the King shall act, in matters of legislation, with the advice of his two Councils. The constitution of Great Britain being different in that respect, the example of what was done here was thought no precedent for doing the like in Ireland. It was likewise foreseen that that method of recommending all or any of the measures under consideration might draw in question the nature of the connexion between Great Britain and Ireland, which it has been always thought sound policy to avoid, and which, at this time, for various reasons, seems particularly desirable. Besides, every end was thought equally attainable in the manner proposed in the note of the 8th; and, further, this note was only meant to assist his memory, and nothing more, he having received by word of mouth the fullest instructions, the whole being a fitter subject for confidential conversation than for a minute of a cabinet, as there would, at the least, be an impropriety in any Lord going further to His Majesty in matters of this nature than by suggesting what is likely to be his opinion when the subject comes to be properly considered in the Privy Council. But the note, however considered, shows upon the face of it that it must have expressly meant to denote a different mode of communication; as, had it been intended that he should mention in his speech one of the Bills as by command from the King, that Bill could not with any propriety be joined in the same words with that for limiting the duration of Parliaments, and approved of only equally with it, if found convenient by the Lord Lieutenant. Besides, the words which follow, "that a language should be held by your Excellency to such as "you thought proper, of the favourable disposition of the King's "servants in regard to both these Bills," would be sufficient to make the intention quite clear, as they would have been in the one case improper and even contradictory, but follow naturally from the considerations mentioned, and, had the opinion of the King's servants been different the night before, are sufficient to show an alteration of that opinion on reconsideration. These circumstances are so clear in the recollection of the other Lords of the Council, as well as in his own, that it is not possible to omit stating them. At the same time can assure his Excellency that there is not one who is not convinced of his good intentions through the whole, or who attributes the misapprehension to any other cause than the hurry and "variety of distress" which naturally agitated his mind

at that period. His Majesty also is persuaded that it will not prevent or slacken the activity or zeal with which his Excellency is so properly animated in his service, and from which he promises himself as great an effect as the situation of things will admit of. It is supposed, however, that care will be taken in this Act to make it lawful for His Majesty to remove any of the judges in Ireland upon the representation of the Privy Council and the two Houses of Parliament. A clause likewise must be inserted giving the same weight to the two Houses of Parliament in England.

In regard to the Bill for limiting the duration of Parliaments, the same reasoning applies to it as to the other. It is impossible to send any resolution of the King's servants more decided than that carried over by his Excellency, and more than once repeated in his, Lord Shelburne's, letters, that it is their "determination to support it by their opinions in Council."

In regard to an augmentation of the army, His Majesty cannot hear without both wonder and concern that there should be any difficulties made among the principal persons consulted, of coming up to the extent of his wishes, which does not go much above 3,000. At the same time that it appears by the accounts sent that the whole amount raised on the subject in Ireland is not more than 1,505,761*l.* for two years, a sum far from heavy compared with what this country bears,—and that a far larger share of the revenue than the King now desires appears to be destined to purposes not particularly recommended by His Majesty, the misapplication of which has been so generally understood, that it has been the object, not only of former Lord Lieutenants, but also of some of the most respectable persons there, to reduce that branch of public expense by resolutions not to grant any more money for carrying on old or new works, unless under the most particular circumstances,—it is hoped the endeavours of his Excellency will still awaken in the principal persons in Ireland a sense of what is necessary for their own security, and will prevail upon them for this end to "exert" a part of the resources of that kingdom. Upon the whole his Excellency's answer to the last letter on the subject is expected, in which His Majesty directs him to mention the particular persons from whom assurances shall be received in regard to it, as well as those who object to it, and their reasons for such objection.

As to the point of the security desired, if the Irish people have any doubt about it, after all the assurances given, it is always to be remembered that the Commons of Ireland retain the true constitutional security in their own hands, by having it in their power to refuse the continuance of such additional duties as shall be granted for this purpose. However, on the fullest consideration, and on examining a variety of modes, there does not seem the least possibility of giving any further satisfaction in that respect, except by using general words setting forth the intention of Government that 12,000 men shall constantly remain in Ireland, as far as is consistent with such a defence as the safety of both kingdoms in the case of any sudden or extraordinary emergency may require, in the preamble of the Act which shall be passed here to take off the restriction laid on His Majesty by the 10th of King William. Or, if the address from the House of Commons, mentioned by his Excellency, is intended to set forth the exposed situation of the kingdom and the necessity of such an augmentation, adding their wish that 12,000 men should be constantly stationed in Ireland, His Majesty's answer may be so drawn as to contain the same assurances, either in those words, or words to the same effect, provided the address be kept within the plan mentioned.

Is not yet able to answer him in regard to the Chancellor, no person having been yet decided upon; nor is it to be presumed that so small a delay as has been in the appointment of a fit person can have any other effect in Ireland than a sense of His Majesty's paternal care and caution not to appoint an improper one.

In respect to the order relative to pensions and places (the only point where his, Lord Shelburne's, punctuality can be called in question), it was sent in his despatch of the 5th inst. Was rather induced to defer it, as his Excellency at the Lord President's had expressed a wish not to receive it immediately. Is persuaded that he is too intent upon supporting the dignity of the King and his Government, not to take proper care to prevent any address of Parliament being grounded on it, as no satisfactory answer can be given to it.

Ireland,
v. 431, No. 38.637. EARL OF SHELBURNE to the LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND.

Acknowledges his Excellency's despatches of the 13th, 15th, 16th, and 17th, received yesterday morning.

As to the motion made in the House relative to the vacancy of the Seals, he acquainted him by the last post of the appointment of Mr. Justice Hewitt to the office of Chancellor of Ireland, whose known attachment to Revolution principles, great knowledge, and unspotted integrity, will, it is hoped, give satisfaction. Cannot conceal His Majesty's extreme surprise, not only at such a motion being made and supported at the very moment when his care and attention to his people has been shown in the strongest manner, but at the great unreasonableness of such a clamour, when it is a fact of public notoriety that in this kingdom, where the business is not less important nor the causes less numerous, the seals have at times been kept open many months longer.

As to the design of a short Money Bill, it is impossible to express the astonishment with which the account of such a measure was received by everybody here; a measure which strikes not only at the dignity of the King, but at the very being of Government. Could it be possible to suppose for a moment that it was to meet with success, great confusion in Ireland would not only be the inevitable consequence, but it would be the just occasion of rejecting the very Bills that were the pretended object of such unprecedented conduct, in which case the contrivers of such a measure must have stood condemned both in the sight of God and man, and experienced the certain indignation of the public, who must soon see through the flimsy pretext of founding their unjustifiable jealousy upon a comparison of what happened in the administration of the late Lord Lieutenant with the communication now made by his Excellency; the one being only the Lord Lieutenant's personal approbation of a Bill, whereas his Excellency went out apprized of the unanimous determination of the King's servants to support two of the Bills in Council, and of their favourable disposition to hear whatever should be offered in regard to the two others. Nor is it to be supposed that the guarded manner of making this communication recommended would have produced any other effect than that of increasing the confidence of every intelligent person, by showing with what deliberation this measure had been adopted, as far as the King's servants could with safety or propriety go. Could it be meant as an alarm only, it cannot be looked upon in any other light than as one of the meanest stratagems which low cunning, narrow parts, and interested motives could suggest to any set of men in public affairs. The King's servants persevere, notwithstanding, in the same resolution as to the several Bills when they shall come over. Mr. Malone's behaviour at the meeting convened on this occasion has confirmed the King's servants in the very high opinion they expressed, before his Excellency's departure, of that gentleman's wisdom as well as great ability. Has the satisfaction to state that the King took particular notice of his conduct. His Excellency will therefore acquaint him of the King's approbation, as well as the Lord Annaly, whose moderation does him great honour, and Mr. Prime Serjeant, with the other lords and gentlemen, according to the several degrees of zeal towards His Majesty and true regard to their country with which they have acted. And though His Majesty does not think proper to recede from his resolution with regard to places and pensions, and His Majesty's servants stand precluded from mentioning any such to him by the terms of the despatch of the 5th inst., yet the King will take into consideration such other just marks of his countenance and protection as his Excellency shall at the end of the session, or at his return into the Royal presence, submit to him as proper to be shown to those who have contributed strength and facility to his affairs.

As to the augmentation of the army, has already written so fully on the subject that there is nothing to add. It will remain to be seen whether, after so many instances of His Majesty's inclination to gratify the wishes of his people, the principal persons in Ireland, in their conduct upon that head, as well as in the manner of carrying through the whole sessions, have had the public interest in view, or have been actuated by motives of a less honourable and disinterested nature. In regard to a militia, could a well-digested and safe plan be offered, it must meet with the approbation of His Majesty's servants, who are too intent on the security of Ireland not to see with particular satisfaction every addition which can be made to it. But this, so far from rendering an augmentation unnecessary, makes it a measure of essential utility to the safety of that kingdom, till such a scheme can be brought to perfection, which must be a work of some time; and even then the number of regular forces will in time of danger not be found too great, when they may be wanted to relieve the militia from too continued fatigue. It appears by the paper marked B, sent over in his Excellency's despatch of the 5th inst., that it was proposed to provide for this augmentation by a vote of credit, in which case there will be no hazard in letting the Money Bill pass, and the Committee of Supply be closed. If the Money Bill, however, should come over loaded with a number of private grants, his Excellency must be sensible with what an ill appearance it can afterwards be urged that "the state of the revenue of Ireland cannot bear" what is absolutely necessary for the public security.

Has the pleasure of acquainting his Excellency of the King's approbation of his spirit and activity, and that His Majesty is persuaded that by making the public the great object of his (the Lord Lieutenant's) administration, "enabled" as he is on the several points which the people of Ireland have at heart, (not to mention the single point desired by His Majesty, which can be suggested to him only by his concern for the good of his kingdom,) he (the Lord Lieutenant) will be able to defeat any attempts which shall be made to sow mistrust between His Majesty and his people, with a view to satisfy private ambition, and to carry on his administration with satisfaction to the King and honour to himself. A draft, marked "Secret." 15 pp.

642. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND to the EARL OF SHELBURNE.

Has to open a little further the result of his mind relative to his own situation. Would wish to avoid all altercation with the King's servants—hates it at all times with others; wishes them very well; and there is scarce anything he would not endure rather than distress His Majesty's Government. But they will pardon him if he says that upon the most thorough recollection he cannot charge his memory with any positive instruction to alter the determination of mentioning the Judges in the speech. The idea still remains strong with him that some one at least of the popular points was intended to be recommended therein, nor does he remember that at any meeting that of mentioning the Judges to hold their offices during good behaviour was ever objected to. As to his attending the King's servants at the Lord President's on Thursday evening, October 8th, he considered it as merely casual by his having staid in town to pay his duty to the Queen; nor has he the least recollection that his attendance there was to consider that or any other of the great points; but, hearing at court from Mr. Conway that the Duke of Grafton was to be at the Lord President's that night, he gave up his design of leaving London in the evening from the hopes of hearing his Grace's final opinion relative to the Chancellor and the Septennial Bill; which latter was thought a requisite to his instructions, that he might speak with the greater confidence to the King's servants and principal persons here. So that, had he set out as proposed, he could only have had the notes of Mr. Conway, and not his, Lord Shelburne's, memorandum (which, singly taken, he confesses is not very explicit), to direct him what plan to adhere to on his arrival in Ireland. Mr. Conway's notes are very positive and clear; the meeting, when they were taken, was very full. The Chancellor, in particular, was present; and Mr. Conway, though it might not be in his department, was the person who had writ both to the Chancellor and to the Lord President, if possible to attend, and finally to determine what was to be the rule of his, the Lord Lieutenant's, conduct in this kingdom. He thought, and still thinks, both from Mr. Conway's note and his own recollection, that he had exactly followed what was then absolutely fixed, and what at former meetings had been universally agreed to, not without the participation of the King himself, to whom he communicated what had been proposed relative to the Judges, to which His Majesty was graciously pleased to give his thorough approbation. His Excellency could have no temptation to deviate from what he understood to be the sense of the King's Government. He could not be supposed to seek popularity at the hazard of endangering the constitution of Ireland, nor to have any view in embarrassing His Majesty's administration. The expressions in his Lordship's last despatch acquit him amply, in the opinion of the King's servants, of all the folly and guilt of such an intention; but at the same time they leave him loaded with the anxiety of the prospect of the transaction being attended hereafter with very serious circumstances, when the alterations which are proposed shall bring the subject under consideration, and may, perhaps, occasion this Bill relating to the Judges being lost. And therefore he would, with the greatest humility, and from no other motive but the truest attachment to a kind master and the prosperity of his service, suggest whether, in the present situation, considering the sentiments of his other servants, and how far it may appear to the King to affect the stability of his Government, it may not be more advisable for his Excellency not to continue here. Has ever held it a maxim, that whoever wished to be honoured with the King's commands should consider his service in the first instance. And God forbid that at the hour he is distinguished by His Majesty's favour and patronage, any poor consideration to his own personal interest should contribute to diminish the dignity and lustre of his Sovereign's reign. Let his Lordship think of this, and consider well the situation of this Bill, and the King's service, and view his Excellency in the light of a willing sufferer and an honourable subject.

Is sorry to state that he has been as unsuccessful as his predecessors in endeavouring to lower the Parliamentary grants, for the sum granted amounts to 118,000*l*. Is not certain whether this has arisen from the want of inclination or of power to check this "shamefaced" abuse. Has not, indeed, for some time expected any great saving on this head unless something could have been previously substituted in place of them; nevertheless, from the repeated communication with the Speaker and Lord Shannon and their friends, he did flatter himself, but in vain, that the King's servants by their assistance would have succeeded in obtaining some reduction on this head. The tax of 4*s*. in the pound on all salaries and profits of employments payable to persons who shall not reside six calendar months in each year in this kingdom, was moved by Mr. Longfield yesterday in the Committee of Ways and Means, and was considered by the servants of the Crown, from the circumstances of the time, irresistible; the more so as it was most probably known that this tax, together with the lowering of the duties upon teas and the reduction of Parliamentary grants, were the means suggested at the several meetings to defray the expense of the augmentation, upon which tax his Lordship's despatches gave no directions. The King's servants did very properly propose excepting such pensions as are payable to any of the descendants of the late King, which was immediately agreed to. The other exceptions were proposed by Mr. Longfield, and are agreeable to a former Act of this sort, now repealed. His Excellency knew nothing of this tax before a resolution was taken upon it in the House. The duties upon tea were in the same Committee lowered with a view to increase the revenue, and will be made a part of the Money Bill, in exact conformity to the plan sent over to the Duke of Grafton, and unanimously approved of by the King's servants. This plan will be of great use to the fair trader, increase the revenue, and be of infinite advantage to the East India Company.

The heads of a Bill for limiting the duration of Parliaments, after having met with some small but ineffectual opposition, were brought up on Wednesday last by the Speaker, attended by the House, desiring that they might be transmitted as the general sense of the Commons of Ireland. This sort of address, though not usual, is not without precedent. It will be seen from the printed votes of the 27th, that his Excellency has been very guarded in his answer, not engaging for more than to transmit them with the utmost expedition, and to represent them as the general sense of the Commons of Ireland, as soon as it was in his power,—meaning thereby when they should be constitutionally approved of by the Council here. The Committee would by no means come into the suggestion to fill up the blank with the word eight, though he believes many members do in truth wish for even a longer term. It was proposed to enlarge it to ten, but that met with a negative. At the same time, he has great reason to believe, that, should the Privy Council in England make the Bill octennial, though it would in some degree take away from the popularity of the measure, it would by no means endanger its being rejected here.

The Bill concerning the Judges is committed for Friday next, when his Lordship's suggestion relative to the Privy Council here and the two Houses of Parliament in England must, if possible, be inserted. Upon both these points has very great doubts of success, nor does he think, with such alterations in Great Britain, the Bill upon its return will be received. But his doubts arise merely from the temper of the times.

A clause of credit is given for raising the sum of 100,000*l.* for supplying the deficiencies of the aids granted, and carrying on public works. But his Lordship must not imagine this is meant as a provision for the augmentation of the army; for there will be a deficiency to near this amount in the next two years, between the ordinary exigencies of Government and the produce of the hereditary revenue and additional duties. Will not trouble his Lordship at present with anything upon the head of the augmentation of the army, because he is convinced that in three or four days' time he will have completed a negotiation which is now on foot, and from which he will be enabled precisely to state upon what terms this measure may be effectually carried into execution.

P.S.—A motion for a short Money Bill was made very early in the last week by Mr. Longfield, but, not being supported by one member of the Committee, was given up.—Dublin Castle. Marked "Secret." 12 pp.

Encloses a proclamation issued on the 26th past, for prohibiting the exportation of corn from this kingdom. This proclamation being grounded upon an Act of Parliament passed last session in Great Britain, and extending to Ireland, exception was taken in the House of Commons that it should be published here at a time when the Irish Parliament was sitting, and had it in their power to make a provision of the sort themselves; and yesterday a motion was made in the House to address his Excellency to know who advised him to issue it. But the Opposition finding that ground not tenable, an amendment was moved to the question, That an address should be presented to his Excellency to give orders to the printer of the Dublin Gazette to discontinue the printing thereof in that paper. The debate lasted several hours, and late in the evening was ended by the question of adjournment, which was carried in the affirmative,—Ayes 111, Noes 35.

Desires that Ireland may not be included in the Act which Mr. Cooper, of the Treasury, brought in in the British House of Commons, for amending and continuing the Act mentioned in the proclamation. At the same time, as they are each so convinced of the merits of their case, and pressed so earnestly to have it laid before the King, the apprehension of disobliging them both, at a time when every aid is so necessary for the King's service, has induced him now to prefer them.—Dublin Castle.

Sends copies of two letters to be laid before His Majesty; the one from General Greeme, in justification of himself, upon the state of his regiment (upon which subject his Excellency wrote him before leaving England by His Majesty's particular direction); the other from Col. Pepper, of that regiment, upon the return to him of his memorial to sell out. His Excellency had told that Colonel that he had no objection to forwarding his memorial to His Majesty, as well as that of the eldest captain, who is an officer of long service, and has met with great disappointments; but that he could not consistently now recommend Major Calder to purchase, he being a Major of not twelve months standing, while his coming in over the heads of such a vast number of old and meritorious officers would occasion a great deal of noise; but he had no other objection to recommending him, having heard of him as an alert young officer.

The enclosures. General Greeme answers the seven articles against the regiment in detail. The seventh accusation is that the regiment was unfit for service. He admits the charge in it, and says that when he had an opportunity to mention on former occasions to His Majesty the state of the regiment, he ever represented it as by far the worst in the service. He should not be made accountable for what he can neither prevent nor remedy; but if rules of service, regulations of His Majesty, or the standing orders in Ireland can leave him at liberty to act to his own liking, he will most readily become responsible for everything [that] may be found amiss.

Col. Pepper says that he had no thought of selling out till Major Calder made him an offer of 4,000 guineas for his commission, which he accepted, upon being assured by Major Calder that he had sufficient interest to have it carried into execution. The latter gave two conditional notes, the one to the Colonel for 3,500*l.* English, the other to Mrs. Pepper for 700*l.* English, the value of her pension in case she outlived her husband. These were the inducements to sell, and he could not agree to it on other terms, well knowing that less would not be a sufficient provision for himself, his wife, a daughter, and five grandchildren. 7 pp.

663. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to the EARL OF SHELBURNE.

Desires to lay before His Majesty the application that Joseph Sirr, Esq., Town Major of Dublin, (who has served as a commissioned officer upwards of twenty years, and has always been a diligent and good officer, and who gave up a company for the said employment,) may exchange it with Thomas Sankey, Esq., one of the pratique masters in this port, who hath also served as a commissioned officer nine years, and during the late war at Belleisle, Martinico, and the Havannah.

Another letter as to certain army appointments. His Excellency will not, upon this occasion, recommend his first aide-de-camp, Major Fraser, who is an old officer, and has served with great reputation under different generals, to succeed to Lieut.-Col. Williamson, of the 39th Regiment; because at this time, when His Majesty has the important point in view of the Augmentation to carry, the disposal of such a commission to an officer who has very strong connexions here may be of great service. Will, therefore, only request His Majesty's permission at a more proper time to lay an application in favour of Major Fraser at his feet. Lord Belvedere earnestly wishes for this succession for his son, Major Rd. Rochford Mervyn. His Lordship has several members attached to him in the House of Commons, and will support the augmentation zealously. Lieut.-Col. Sandford has memorialised for the same, but now asks for the governorship of Galway, vacant yesterday by the death of Capt. Ayre. He has strong connexions in Parliament, and has taken great pains about the augmentation. Recommends Captain Willm. Fleming, of the 50th, for the majority which Major Rochford Mervyn may vacate, and Captain Thomas Pringle, of the 20th, to succeed Captain Fleming. Lieut.-Col. Beckwith is too old an officer for his Excellency to hesitate to lay his memorial before His Majesty, but he cannot on his part, at this juncture, recommend it to His Majesty.—Dublin.

After the distrust and want of cordiality which followed between him and the principal persons here, after that violent measure of a short Money Bill, it will occasion no surprise that he has been hitherto prevented from sending, with any degree of precision, any opinion with regard to the success of the augmentation. As soon as this motion had been universally rejected, he took up the business of the augmentation with Lord Shannon and Mr. Speaker in the same manner as he had formerly done, knowing from the present situation of things by far the greater support in point of numbers was to be expected from them. Found, by the means of Mr. Prime Serjeant, with whom they are now strongly united, and upon whom as their man of business for conducting the matter through the House of Commons they intend to rely, that this late transaction had made the political connexion between Lord Shannon and Mr. Speaker much stronger than ever; and if certain points could be obtained for them, they would heartily support and carry through the ordinary business of Government, and even the augmentation itself to the extent wished for by His Majesty, if certain persons could be brought to lend their names and co-operate with them, it being understood they themselves should have their share in the disposal of His Majesty's other favours here, in proportion to the number of their friends and their weight in the country. They thought it absolutely necessary to have the Duke of Leinster and Lord Tyrone, together with some of the popular speakers in the House of Commons, such as Sir William Osborne, Mr. Flood, &c., persuaded to give their assistance; otherwise such a party would be raised against so expensive and unpopular a measure as might in the end ruin them, and in the meantime prevent this measure from being carried through by a respectable majority. His Excellency used all the prudent methods to sound and conciliate those popular members to such a measure; and, from what he is told (for he did not choose to enter into this matter himself without encouragement), the plan of augmentation cautiously opened to them did not meet with such objections as seemed to make them very violent or determined against it, though they would give no promise of support. Neither the Duke of Leinster nor Lord Tyrone could be induced to engage heartily in this business, though they showed great readiness to support His Majesty in all the ordinary matters of government. It was but within these two days that he was enabled to transmit, with precision, the opinions of these two noblemen. Gives the reasons which they advanced for their objection.

As to individuals independent of those whom the Government have a hold upon, has met with a very general approbation of the measure; one thing being always taken for granted, that 12,000 shall always remain in Ireland, except when the immediate defence of Great Britain from an invasion or rebellion shall require it; and this security must be absolute and certain, and not in general words, such as those contained in his Lordship's letter of 5 Nov., wherever inserted. On the whole there does not seem to be any doubt that this great point, though not absolutely undertaken by any, may be carried by a very respectable majority, though not without giving way to several things now to be mentioned.

It will be necessary to return as soon as possible the Bill for limiting the duration of Parliaments, without enlarging, at least on any great degree, the term of seven years.

The points pressed by Lord Shannon, the Speaker, and Mr. Prime Serjeant must be complied with, though he does not mean to insinuate that Lord Drogheda can be left out of the Government on his Excellency's return to England, for he is an able, steady man, well-connected, and of great weight, whom he means to recommend to be one of the Lords Justices.

The security of 12,000 men must be explicit, and to the effect before mentioned, and will be most satisfactorily inserted in the Act proposed for taking off the restriction of the 10th of King William.

Considering the independent situation of the chief officers of the Crown, and the events which have happened since his arrival, cannot help wishing that His Majesty should be entreated to recede from the strict rule laid down with regard to pensions for life or years, and reversions; for unless this is done, and power is given him to be explicit to some few persons here, as well as to increase the establishment by being able to create some new offices in the different departments of Government, he fears the augmentation will not be carried through in the way expected. On the whole, if it shall be thought advisable to attempt this measure, which, with the precautions and powers mentioned, may safely be done, an ostensible letter from his Lordship, making it little less than a requisition from the King, would ensure its success. Is now taking every means possible to be acquainted with the real sentiments as well as the objects of the several members of the House of Commons. Marked "Secret and confidential." 9½ pp.

665. The SAME to the SAME.Ireland,
v. 431, NO. 72.

Stating, for his Lordship's private information, the points about which Lord Shannon, Mr. Speaker, and the Prime Serjeant wished to be explicitly satisfied.

Lord Shannon wishes to be appointed one of the three Lords Justices. Mr. Ponsonby expects that the office of Examiner of the Customs, now in possession of his eldest son, should be given to him and his brother for their joint lives. The Prime Serjeant expects that provision should be made for the lives of his two sons, by a grant to them, and the survivor of them, of some office of at least the value of 500*l.* a year. If no vacancy should happen before the rising of Parliament, that either a pension or a salary to that amount should be added to some office to be enjoyed by his two sons during their joint lives, and that his wife should be created a Vicountess at the end of the session. The Prime Serjeant is by far the most powerful man in Parliament, of great abilities to conduct a debate, holds but little that is dependent on Government, has great profits from his profession, and is most essential to Government. Is sorry to say that these are the terms on which they promise to support and carry on the King's usual and ordinary business, because, from the situation they are in at present, he thinks it is the duty at least of the two former to do so without any consideration whatever. Nor can he omit stating that they expect to have some ostensible authority communicated to him on these points from his Lordship. Cannot yet bring them absolutely to undertake the carrying through the augmentation, unless the Duke of Leinster and Lord Tyrone, who, they apprehend, may become the heads of considerable parties here, or Sir William Osborne and Mr. Flood, who are the most popular speakers in the House of Commons, could be brought to lend their name and assistance, it being still considered that if this change should be brought about, they should continue to have their share of recommendation to places of trust and profit in proportion to their numbers and weight in Parliament. If His Majesty agrees to these demands, cannot doubt but that the business of this session would be carried through in the way the King wishes it with the utmost ease. At the same time, if they should be thought too unreasonable, does not despair, with the discretionary powers mentioned in his former letter, and with the attention which he will pay to each particular member of the House of Commons, of being able to bring about what His Majesty has so much at heart. Marked "Secret and separate." 4 pp.

Having immediately in view, in his recommendations, the great object of the augmentation, as Mr. Cuninghame has several relations in Parliament and considerable connexions in this country who will be greatly indebted for so considerable a mark of His Majesty's favour, he conceives that to confer the vacant regiment on him would have a very good effect.

Requests also the King's consent for Major Simon Fraser, of the 24th Regiment, his Excellency's first aide-de-camp, to purchase the commission of Lieut.-Col. Edmonstone, in Lord Lorne's first battalion, who is very much inclined to sell out at the usual price.

As the King's service now so much depends on this gentleman, it is impossible to avoid stating it, lest, if the augmentation be pursued, he should not be so ready as could be wished to conduct this plan through the House. Ireland,
v. 431,
No. 89 a, b.673. The SAME to the SAME.

The service of His Majesty at this time seeming to require that some requests of persons whose abilities and zeal are of use to the points he has immediately in view should be laid before His Majesty, begs his Lordship to present the two following applications.

Lord Bellamont hopes His Majesty will bestow upon him the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, which, he understood from Lord Hertford (who misconceived the King's intentions), was to have accompanied his commission in like manner as it was held by his two predecessors, and the duty of which he has done ever since without pay. No one has been more early or zealous than Lord Bellamont in promoting the augmentation.

Lord Annaly has a brother, Mr. Henry Gore, for whom he is greatly interested. Mr. Gore is much respected in the House of Commons, and indeed the estimation and weight which the family and connexions carry in this country are very considerable. His Excellency would earnestly recommend the enclosed provision for him with a salary of 400*l.* or 500*l.* a year, being assured that the military situation of the Pass of Lanesborough is of the greatest importance.

The distinguishing some persons of those families who have in the unsteady conduct of last month maintained a uniform respect for the King's Government will have a most salutary effect upon the King's measures here. Lord Annaly has been most decided upon every occasion where the honour of the King's Government has been engaged. He has conducted the King's business through the House of Lords with great ability, and defeated every motion there which tended to embarrass it. The increase of the net revenue for the six months preceding Michaelmas 1767 appears to be no less than 26,540*l.*, when compared with the accounts of last year for the same term, which will not a little diminish the objections against the expense of the augmentation.—Dublin Castle. Marked "Private."

The enclosure, being a memorial, signed "Henry Gore," proposing the appointment of a Governor to Lanesborough, as had been done to Athlone, these two towns being the two great passes over the river Shannon, the great barrier between Leinster and Connaught, which is chiefly inhabited by Papists; and in case of an invasion from the West, the invaders' direct and almost only way to Dublin lying through one of these passes. 4 pp.

676. EARL OF SHELburnE to MAJOR GEN. GAGE.

Acknowledging letters, and sending an affidavit of one Potter against Major Rogers, and a copy of Brigadier Carleton's letter in which it was enclosed. This Potter, unluckily, died in the Channel, and no papers of his which could give the least additional light in the affair have been discovered. When Potter found himself dying, he desired Messrs. Baxter and Bostwick, who came over in the same ship, to take charge of his trunk, and to account for his few effects to his family. They have been examined twice, and declare that Potter did not communicate to them the nature of his charge against Major Rogers, but that he had often said on the voyage that he had very serious crimes to lay to his charge. Being interrogated as to what they knew concerning Major Rogers themselves, they declared that the Major told them at Michilimakinac, that he had received repeated invitations to enter into the French service, which he certainly would do if not rewarded up to his merit in the English; that he would wait the event of his solicitations, and that he would recompense in a most liberal manner any person who would convey to him by express from Philadelphia the earliest intelligence of what turn his solicitations would take at home. They declared that they were in the utmost apprehension for their property, as well as that of many other traders, now lying at Michilimakinac and Lake Superior, for that they were sure he had intentions to debauch the garrison of Michilimakinac, in which they feared he would have too much success; as, by his familiarity with them, he has gained such an ascendancy over them as to prevail on them to give him all their pay, circulating his notes in lieu thereof; which money, they say, was very considerable, the soldiers having no great opportunity to spend their pay in a place where it is so easy to subsist by hunting. They further say, that Rogers, by running in debt to the traders for goods which he distributed very lavishly among the Indians, had very much strengthened the good opinion which the Indians in general entertained of him, and that, therefore, they could not avoid representing him as a very dangerous man, who meditated much mischief. The persons who can give the best account of him are Stanley, Goddard, and Tuite, at present sent out by him on discoveries westward of Lake Superior.

It has been found necessary to delay for a short time the determination of His Majesty's intentions relative to the boundary lines not yet completed.—Whitehall.

His Excellency's letter of the 8th instant, enclosing the memorials of Sentleger Sentleger, of Doneraile, Esq., and John St. Leger, of Grange Mellon, Esq., have been left in His Majesty's hands for consideration.

His Majesty is pleased to admit General Greeme's justification, since he has sent the proper orders to his regiment for putting it in a proper condition, and ordered all officers to join the regiment. His Majesty also approves his Excellency's reasons with respect to Major Calder, and of his discouraging on all occasions a deviation from those regulations for the price of commissions which have been laid down; and,

His Majesty also approves of the recommendations for successions in his letter of the 12th inst.

678. The SAME to the SAME.

As both the Money Bills have passed without any material amendment, will only observe, in regard to the tax upon absentee placemen and pensioners, that it was originally proposed solely for the purpose of augmenting the army,—a measure not sufficiently certain of success to make the consideration of the particular mode of providing for it necessary. In the meantime, it was not possible to conceive that this fund could be applied to defray the increased expense of private grants, which, it was hoped, would have been reduced instead of being augmented, and still less that this tax should have been revived at this time for such a purpose, without inserting in this Bill all the exceptions in the Act of 1751, particularly that which regards the King's sign manual, which seems to have escaped his Excellency. It was a mark of respect due to the Crown; it was necessary, even in point of justice, that the King might have been enabled to exempt some persons upon the pension list, in consequence of actual purchases made for the avowed and general benefit of both kingdoms. It were likewise much to be wished, for the dignity of His Majesty and the honour of his people, that others which were the rewards of great and never-to-be-forgotten services, such as those of Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, and of Sir Edward Hawke, whose intrepidity and good conduct so very lately saved Ireland from the dreadful consequences of invasion, should not suffer a diminution, as they are likely to do, from this tax.

Is now to answer his Excellency's two secret letters of the 12th inst., containing his opinion as to the augmentation of the army, as well as of the several favours expected from His Majesty; and further, desiring an ostensible letter from him, making it little less than a requisition from the King. In regard to the last point, his Lordship's expressions already used were of the strongest kind; His Majesty's commands to his Excellency in person were explicit; the opinion of his Ministers was formed upon a variety of circumstances arising as well from foreign intelligence, of which it may not be proper to enter into all the particulars, as from the most serious consideration of the internal state of Ireland; his Excellency has fully made the communication to those who, by their situations, are best able to judge of the necessity of this measure, and who must be convinced that the good of Ireland is the sole motive of His Majesty's wishing it.

In regard to the rest of the letter, his Excellency must be sensible that several of the terms mentioned fall within the rule laid down by His Majesty as not to be departed from, and that his Ministers stand precluded from proposing to him the granting of places and pensions for life or years. It must, therefore, remain with the leading persons in Ireland to act as they can answer to their own consciences, as servants to His Majesty, as men of property, and as representatives of the people, to whom they will be accountable for their conduct, and for the evil consequences which may ensue from the failure of this measure, so strongly recommended to them by His Majesty. At the same time, the King will consider the merits of those who shall have exerted themselves for the support of his Government and the good of Ireland; nor is it to be supposed that the conduct of those who shall have acted from motives of a less honourable nature can escape His Majesty's notice. It will then likewise be the proper time to determine upon the persons whom His Majesty shall think proper to be named Lords Justices of Ireland.

The Enabling Act will be proposed here after the recess of Parliament, whatever is done in Ireland; and in the drawing of it the point of security will be attended to, as far as the several considerations before mentioned will allow.

The heads of a Bill for making the Judges' commissions to continue during good behaviour having been unexpectedly moved the first day of the session, were by that means taken out of the channel in which he intended they should have gone, being that of the King's servants only. The consequence of which was that many very improper things were introduced, which have since, though with difficulty, been removed. As to what his Lordship mentioned, that care should be taken to make it lawful for His Majesty to remove any of the Judges of Ireland upon the representation of the Privy Council and the two Houses of Lords and Commons, and to insert a clause giving the same power to the two Houses of Parliament in Great Britain, he did thereupon, before the heads of the Bill were committed, call the King's servants together, and desire them to get the same inserted in Committee. Upon which they unanimously advised him not to insist upon anything of that sort, which would certainly be rejected with indignation,—beseeching him, at the same time, not to let such an idea get abroad, as it might disturb the quiet of the session, and raise so much distrust and ill-will as would afterwards frustrate every great object of Government. The present Chief Justice is highly deserving of His Majesty's favour; for, whatever his pretensions to the Great Seal might be, he has submitted as becomes him most cheerfully to the King's choice, and has upon every occasion given the most hearty and disinterested support to Government; nor has he himself expressed a wish for anything more than the small provision for his brother, Mr. Gore, mentioned in the letter of the 16th. | Yates, J. - Do. | Williams, Richard. Pearse, Wil- liam. | Sheep-stealing Stealing from a wreck. | Death Do. | Cornwall Do. | Transpn. for life. | The prisoner's father, whose character was good, employed a teneement by the life of his son. In some respects the prisoner was not so criminal as others who were not brought to justice. But the inhumanity of plundering the distressed, and increasing the calamities of the unfortunate, determined the Judge to leave him for execution. As there were many common people in court, the Judge took the opportunity of inveighing very warmly against so savage a crime, and of declaring publicly that no importunities whatsoever should induce him to relieve the criminal. In order not to disappoint any intended access to the Royal clemency, however, he sent a week's respite, adhering to his declared resolution of not reprieving the prisoner himself. The Judge did not recommend him for mercy. | 21 .. | 41 |

EARL OF SHELBURNE.

His Lordship having made in his letter of 19 Dec. some very mortifying observations seeming to infer that the disagreeable part of the Money Bill relative to the tax upon placemen and pensioners was owing to his Excellency's inattention, he is obliged for his own justification to go fully into that business.

Having observed, the instant that he communicated His Majesty's wishes for the augmentation of the army, that the expense of it appeared very alarming, he made it his business to consider of ways and means to defray the same; and in his letter of the 5th Nov. he informed his Lordship that at a very general meeting he had suggested three expedients, one of which was the tax of 4s. in the pound on absentee placemen and pensioners, if the same should be approved by His Majesty. It was evident this tax must be very agreeable to the country. It would produce 22,000*l.* per ann. if proposed without any exception as to His Majesty's sign manual, which, from the experience of a former Bill, was well known to render that tax inconsiderable to the public, at the same time that it bore very hard upon those individuals who most wanted favour, but had not interest to procure it. It appeared to him, too, that if this tax were proposed by the King's servants the dignity of the Crown would not be hurt, and that reasonable exceptions would be readily assented to. But, not receiving any answer to this letter of the 5th Nov., he did not think himself justified in suffering any such tax to be proposed on the part of the Crown, though, from the unexpected and immoderate grants in the Committee of Supply, he was still more convinced how necessary it was to have some resource for the augmentation besides the duty upon teas, the plan of which was of course sent to the Duke of Grafton, and unanimously approved of by H.M.'s servants on the 16th Nov. In the meantime, it having been generally known that this tax upon absentees had been considered by the King's servants in Ireland, when it was observed that no proposal of that sort had been made by them, Mr. Longfield (the same gentleman who was to have moved the short Money Bill), without any previous notice, on the 27th Nov., took up this matter in such a manner that any opposition by the

King's servants must certainly have failed, the Committee being at that time very thin.

When he mentioned in his despatch of the 12th Dec. that he knew nothing of this tax till it passed, he meant the appropriation of the tax. Mr. Malone, the chairman, as the Committee were rising, having unexpectedly made the proposal of an appropriation, another difficulty was thrown in the way. So that, considering the circumstances, his Lordship will, he hopes, view the disagreeable parts of the Bill as things which did not escape him, but which he could not prevent; and that the same prudential reasons which induced the Privy Council in England to consent to this Bill compelled him to acquiesce in what neither time nor the strength of Government in Ireland enabled him to oppose with success. With respect to exceptions of the noble personages his Lordship mentioned, it was judged upon the spot that any attempt to push such clauses would have been unsuccessful, and have probably introduced distinctions and questions having the most disagreeable consequences.

Most entirely agrees that the leading persons in Ireland ought, as they will answer it to their consciences as servants of the Crown, as men of property, and as representatives of the people, to support the augmentation of the army, so strongly recommended by His Majesty, and calculated solely for the benefit of Ireland. But being upon the spot, and seeing the general disposition of the House of Commons in its true light, he cannot be so sanguine as to hope that these sentiments are sufficient grounds upon which to carry a measure of this sort through Parliament. At the time he left London he knew that His Majesty's intentions were not to grant any pensions or places in Ireland for lives or years, nor has he given any person in Ireland the smallest hopes, though he could not help listening to their proposals; but when he observed how very weak this Government was become by a very different conduct held by his predecessors, he thought it his duty to submit this matter again to His Majesty's further consideration, being convinced that until the system of Government in Ireland can be totally changed, and the true weight and interest of the Crown brought back to its former channel, there must be some relaxation of this rule. Cannot help being extremely sorry that H.M.'s Ministers consider themselves as precluded from proposing anything of this sort to His Majesty, for he is much afraid that a strict adherence thereto will at this time be of great prejudice to H.M.'s service, and perhaps entirely defeat the augmentation of the army, which His Majesty has so much at heart.

His Lordship having assured him when in London that H.M.'s servants would, in Council, support the Bill for limiting the duration of Parliaments, and having repeatedly since in several letters authorised him to hold this language to all with whom he should confidentially converse, cannot wonder at having been informed in his (the Lord Lieutenant's) letter of the 12th past that it would be necessary to return that Bill as soon as possible. No answer having been received to that part of the letter, hopes to be excused reminding him that if the measure is really to be supported in Council, and the Bill to be returned, every delay therein creates distrust, and may in the end very much diminish the effects meant to be produced by His Majesty's gracious intentions towards Ireland. It is impossible for him to express how very anxious he is to receive the draft of the Enabling Act, because, if he understood rightly, he will there find the point of security attended to, as far as His Majesty and his servants can think advisable and proper. Is every day more convinced that people in Ireland will by no means engage to support the augmentation till he can say with precision what security is to be given that 12,000 men shall always remain in Ireland, as he has stated in almost every letter.

Desires to be informed whether, after the Christmas recess, he is to have the plan of augmentation proposed in Parliament, supposing that Lord Shannon, the Speaker, and some other considerable persons, which he very much suspects will be the case, should not undertake to give their hearty support; and whether, in forming this proposal, he is to make the papers which His Majesty himself delivered to him the rule of his conduct, not having any other instructions to direct him.

Proposes three additional points which will greatly contribute to carry through this measure with success.

First, to reduce immediately the great expense of the staff, or to let the same diminish by degrees as the general officers may happen to die or be provided for. Although he has been applied to by some to mention them to His Majesty for the succession to the command of his army here, he would by no means (viewing his own inferior situation in military service) presume to mention to his Sovereign his opinion upon the merit of officers so far his superiors, especially at a time when he is assured that any mark of economy would be one of the strongest arguments in favour of the augmentation, and when it is universally observed in Ireland that the army in England is commanded under His Majesty by a general in chief without pay, and three reviewing generals.

Second, to disband two or all of the four regiments of horse, whose annual expense is 44,286*l.*, as they are considered, from the circumstances of the country and the service in time of peace, not to be in any degree so useful as the lighter cavalry.

Last, to constitute upon some well concerted plan a small Board of Control for examining and checking the contingent expenses of the army. A plan of this sort, while it would provide for some of the members of the House of Commons, and increase the influence of Government, would also make great savings to the public. —Dublin Castle. Marked & Sealed. 11 pp.

Encloses for inquiry a copy of a memorial from Mons. Durand, the French Minister.

The memorial entered (French), which relates that a French fisherman and his brother, returning to St. Pierre in their boat from fishing, perceived a fire and something like a tent on File-Verte, and, thinking it to be a signal for succour, made for the spot.

Arrived there, three armed Englishmen appeared, one of whom stated that they had been put on the Isle the evening before by the captain of the sloop of war "Pearl," with orders to attract French boats there, and afterwards carry them to Fortune Bay. The French fishermen threw themselves on the Englishmen and disarmed them, when they cried for quarter. They were left on the Isle and supplied with provisions, they stating that the privateer would return to fetch them.

The memorial prays that they might be punished on the spot, where the example would produce more effect than anything that could be done in Europe.

Though the Earl of Bellamont's zeal for the King's service does him honour, and is extremely agreeable to His Majesty, yet as his advancement to an earldom was understood by the King to be a full compensation for his pretensions to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, the expectations of which induced him to purchase the place of Deputy Quartermaster General, he, Lord Shelburne, cannot give any hopes of the King's complying with his request, His Majesty judging it improper that such a rank should continue annexed to that commission.

The repeated account of Lord Annaly's steady and uniform conduct hitherto, as well as the disposition which he shows to facilitate the King's business and that of the public, have made His Majesty so fully sensible of his merits as to incline him to give the most favourable ear to any request coming from his Lordship; His Majesty will therefore take the proposition of Col. Nos. 10 a, b, and 12.733. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to the EARL OF SHELBURNE.

Having communicated to the Speaker and Lord Shannon, through the Prime Serjeant, the answer received by his Lordship's despatch of the 19th Dec. in answer to his secret letter of the 12th, they desired to know whether it was determined to push the measure of the Augmentation this year, or whether some step could not be taken for its success in a future session. He told them that he expected to receive soon after the holidays the draft of the Enabling Act, and His Majesty's further orders; that he could not take upon him to enter into any stipulations that might be contrary to them; that all the security would be given for maintaining the 12,000 men in Ireland that the case would admit of; and as the kingdom was undeniably in a very critical and defenceless condition, it was his opinion he should have orders to pursue this measure this session. Since this they have informed him, through Mr. Prime Serjeant, that they cannot undertake to support this measure, as their friends think it too late in the session, and are averse to a new vote of credit, or to opening the supplies again. Nor do they think that any security given by a British Act of Parliament will be sufficient; on the contrary, that an attempt to augment the army here by any other than an Irish Act would occasion great dissatisfaction.

Is greatly concerned to be disappointed of the support of the two most considerable interests in this kingdom; and it may be judged from this and other preceding circumstances how little it has hitherto been in his power to represent this measure as certain of success without their concurrence. The Prime Serjeant judges it in vain to undertake this measure without their support. Mr. Attorney General declines his assistance, and thinks a saving should be made in the military establishment instead of increasing the debt: so that of the King's servants in the House of Commons there are only Mr. Solicitor General, Mr. Serjeant Lill, and Mr. Serjeant Dennis to whom he can look for assistance. Is in great hopes of Mr. Malone's support, if any saving as far as 17,000*l.* annually was judged proper to be made in the military establishment, which, added to the 22,000*l.* from the tax on pensions, would defray the annual expense of the augmentation. The securing 12,000 men for the defence of the kingdom will, Mr. Malone thinks, be a strong inducement to come into the augmentation of the six battalions abroad.

With respect to the numbers which will, it is hoped, support Government on this occasion, and for which he is greatly obliged to Lord Drogheda's interest and weight, the calculations turn out better than expected. Nevertheless he would be singular if he were to presume to answer for carrying this question without the strong interest of Lord Shannon and the Speaker; with them, there are few would doubt of success.

Every art will be used to prejudice the minds of the people against this salutary measure the longer it is delayed, as may be seen by some public prints he transmits. Addresses may be procured against this measure from boroughs, which will greatly influence members now inclined to vote for it, especially as the expectation of the return of the Septennial Bill grows languid. The popularity which would follow the return of that Bill would prevent any unfavourable impressions circulated against the Augmentation.

Encloses a paper, which, as it comes from a person of great abilities and weight, and contains those arguments which will probably be strongly urged upon this measure in Parliament, may, for that reason, merit the attention of His Majesty's servants.—Dublin Castle.

The paper referred to, unsigned, and submitted as "Loose thoughts" by a "Sincere lover of both countries."

Not bound in their proper place, but after the next letter and its enclosure are cuttings from a newspaper, apparently the "Free Press," which, probably, are from the "public prints" sent in this letter. They consist of a letter from a correspondent, who signs himself "Hopeful," and the first paragraph of an article. The letter expresses confidence in "the two great men" as to their support to the Limitation Bill and opposition to the Augmentation.

26 Jan.

Ireland,
v. 432, No. 33.750. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to the EARL OF SHELBURNE.

It having been rumoured that upon the meeting of the House of Commons after the recess, Government would be embarrassed by motions from the Opposition, he summoned a meeting this morning of the gentlemen who are understood to be His Majesty's principal servants and conductors of the business of Government in the House of Commons, viz., Mr. Prime Serjeant, Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General, Mr. Serjeant Dennis, and Mr. Serjeant Lill, and informed them of the rumours, telling them at the same time that he had not received any particular information relative to the Septennial Bill since the recess, and that he was equally uninformed as to any new matter since then as to the augmentation; but that he had not lost sight of either the one or the other, and that they might depend on any intelligence thereupon being communicated to them the moment it came to hand. He entreated them, in the strongest manner, to exert themselves to prevent any motions being made to preclude the scheme of the augmentation from being laid before the House, or for addressing His Majesty concerning the Septennial Bill, desiring them to give their assistance in general against any attempts which might be calculated to draw disagreeable consequences upon Government.

Is sorry to state that he did not receive any explicit answer from them whether they would or would not stand forth as requested. To say the truth, as to the Prime Serjeant and Attorney General, he has not at present the smallest hopes of their assistance, though as to the others he is convinced they are perfectly well inclined to support Government if they thought there was any chance of their being properly assisted so as to do it effectually. If during the remainder of this session matters should take a disagreeable turn, which he is inclined to think they will, notwithstanding his most strenuous endeavours shall be exerted to prevent it, his Lordship must not be at a loss to know how impossible it is for him in his present situation to be responsible for the events of this session.

Had also a conference this day on the same subject with the Speaker, and desired his assistance, and that of his friends, to resist every motion in the House which might tend to embarrass and discredit the King's service. He has given reason to hope that his wishes are, and his endeavours shall be, as far as is in his power, to suspend any measure that was not of the most moderate nature.

Something of what he foretold these gentlemen in the morning did happen as soon as the House met, when a motion was made by Mr. Perry to enquire into the application of the money granted for the support of the military establishment from the 31st of March 1751, and also into the present state of the military establishment; which Committee was accordingly appointed to meet to-morrow morning. Its intention is, he apprehends, to show to the public the increase of the expense of the military establishment since 1751; and from thence, and from other expenses of Government, undoubtedly much increased since that period, to form resolutions in order to prove that this country in its present situation is not capable of bearing the charge of the intended augmentation. It would have been imprudent, perhaps impossible, to have prevented this Committee; but as it very much depends on the leading men in the King's service to prevent them from coming to resolutions which may not only be very disagreeable to His Majesty, but absolutely destructive of the augmentation, his Excellency will to-morrow call upon them separately and solemnly for the last time to declare how far he may depend upon their assistance.

His Lordship, from this despatch and others, cannot but see the weakness of H.M.'s Government, and how impossible it is to execute His Majesty's commands, or to resist the attacks which are likely to be made against his authority; for which reasons his Excellency cannot help submitting whether it may not be proper, before it is too late, to consider of such means as shall give force and vigour to the Government.—Dublin Castle. 28 Jan.

Ireland,
v. 432, No. 34.756. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to the EARL OF SHELBURNE.

Yesterday a motion was made in the House of Commons by Mr. Bagwell, "That any application to His Majesty by King's letter to grant money after it has been refused in the Committee of Supply is highly improper and derogatory to the privileges of this House." After a debate of three hours, it was ended by the question of adjournment, moved by the Solicitor, and carried, —Ayes 92, Noes 85.

Has called this morning upon the several persons mentioned in his despatch of the 26th separately, to know for certain how far he could depend upon their assistance, and likewise had a very explicit conversation with my Lord Shannon; the result of all which has been that his Excellency has not the least reason to expect any solid support either from his Lordship, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Serjeant, or the Attorney General. The latter expresses a readiness officially to defend the rights of the Crown, but would not engage in any share in conducting the measures of Government. The Solicitor General, indeed, has engaged to stand forth upon every occasion where it shall be necessary to support His Majesty's authority; and the rest of the King's servants have been very ready in promising their assistance. Mr. Malone, too, though not in the service of Government, has promised his support whenever any improper motion should arise from a spirit of party to distress Government.

The account now about to be given will convince his Lordship that Lord Shannon, and the three other gentlemen mentioned above, have finally taken their part,—which, whether it is really to distress His Majesty's affairs, or only to alarm his Government so as the more effectually to carry their points, is more than his Excellency can at present tell; but he apprehends that the present temper of the House of Commons may in the meantime force them into such measures as must weaken, and perhaps make it impossible again to restore, His Majesty's authority in this kingdom.

Mr. Bagwell having again taken up the motion of yesterday, with some variation, moved, "That any application to His Majesty

“ to grant money for any purposes which shall have been under the consideration of this House, and which shall have been refused to be provided for by the House, will be considered as highly improper and deserving the censure of this House.” To which a motion being made by Mr. Cavendish (the son of Sir Henry Cavendish mentioned in the despatch of the 15th Nov. on the short Money Bill), that between the words “Majesty” and “to” the words “during the sitting of Parliament” should be inserted, it passed in the negative,—Ayes 61, Noes 111. Then the main question was put, and agreed to without a division. Mr. Solicitor General did stand forth and endeavour to prevent the question from being carried. Mr. Malone, too, though he did not enter into the debate, voted with the minority. The Provost gave Government in this, as he has done in former debates, a most hearty and cordial support. The Prime Serjeant voted with the majority; and Mr. Attorney General, though in the House at the beginning of the debate, did not wait for the division; which, together with Lord Shannon’s and Mr. Speaker’s friends, made the majority so very considerable.

These two motions, threatened from time to time before the recess, arose from a transaction in this kingdom during Lord Hertford’s administration, which is shortly this:—The House of Commons in 1763 granted a sum of money for rebuilding several bridges which had been carried away by a great inundation in the county of Kilkenny. One of these bridges belongs to the borough of St. Kennis (or Irish Town) adjoining Kilkenny, and this not having been completed with the sum allotted in 1763, the House of Commons, on an application for more money, resolved on the 19th Nov. that the rebuilding and completing of Green’s Bridge on the direct road betwixt Dublin and Cork was a work useful to the public, and deserved the further aid of Parliament, and that the further sum of 600*l.* would be necessary for finishing it. But, nevertheless, the proper persons who should have attended particularly to the laying of this case before the Committee of Supply happening to be absent at the proper time, this particular sum was not voted amongst those for navigation and public works. The circumstances of the case, which were truly distressful and of great consequence to the public, having been represented to Lord Hertford, he, in the following March, whilst the Parliament was sitting, stated the same very fully in a letter to the Lords of the Treasury, who laid it before the King; and he, by his Royal letter of 4 July 1766, after the Parliament had been prorogued, granted the sum of 600*l.* for completing the necessary work.

Doubtless a motion of this sort was at first framed in order to reflect on the conduct of Lord Hertford. But it being very well known that what he had done was meritorious in itself, and had been suggested to him by some of the leading men in the House of Commons, it was thought proper to treat this matter as a public grievance, and to turn it into a general patriot resolution.

This question was no sooner carried than another motion was made by Mr. Poer, of a very extraordinary nature, “That the several " branches of the public revenue of this kingdom not appropriated " by Parliament, have been from time to time granted to the " Crown for public uses." This appearing too strong to the Prime Serjeant, he immediately moved the question of adjournment; which the House agreed to, much against the inclination of Mr. Poer, who declared that he would to-morrow make the same motion; which will, doubtless, in the meantime be softened by others who are somewhat less violent than he is, though his Excellency expects it will still remain a question very prejudicial to His Majesty's authority.

Must again beg his Lordship and the rest of the King's servants to consider of, and send as soon as possible, some plan which may give force and vigour to the Government. Has sent for this purpose the present dispatch by a messenger, hoping to have returned by him full and explicit instructions for this very critical conjuncture. His Lordship must have long observed that those who could, and from their offices ought to have carried on His Majesty's affairs with ease, would by no means engage to lend their assistance but under such terms as, upon due consideration, were rejected; also that they are now gone into a determined opposition, not upon trifling or personal grounds, but against the King's Government itself. It is now, therefore, to be considered to whom his Excellency is to resort, and whether it would be prudent to apply to those who are generally in opposition, and who are called the independent gentlemen of this country. Upon the whole, begs that the King's servants will consider, before it is too late, what ought to be done with this Parliament, which, under the present weak state of Government and the temper of the prevailing parties, nothing less, perhaps, than a prorogation can prevent from being carried such lengths as it may hereafter be very difficult to remedy.—Dublin Castle. Marked " Confidential. 9 pp."

As to exchanges, &c., which His Majesty has approved. As to Lieut.-Col. Lushington, Lieut.-Col. Pepper, Capt. Hill, and Capt. Grant, who all desire to retire upon more or less pay, His Majesty doth not relish that mode of retiring, which in many instances hath been attended with great inconveniences to the service, and hath left a long and heavy incumbrance on regiments. The King did not seem to understand the meaning of the elder Captains in the 8th Regiment of Dragoons having declined the purchase, and quitted to Capt. Stewart their pretensions to their succession, as if Col. Lushington was not only to retire on the Major's pay, but at the same time to receive money from the Captain for his promotion to the majority. His Majesty observed, also, in the succession to Capt. Hill, that Ensign Engel is recommended to succeed Lieut. French, but that no reason is assigned why Lieut. Bishop, who seems to serve as an Ensign on Ensign's pay, should not be posted on the muster-rolls as Lieutenant, by which means the regiment would have had its full complement of Ensigns.

These points might have required some explanation, if the King had approved of those officers retiring in the manner proposed; but that is not the case. His Majesty, however, will permit them to retire in any other manner that his Excellency shall propose. A draft, marked "Particular." 4 pp.

The Committee appointed to enquire into the application of the grants for the military establishment is going on from day to day in its enquiries, which, as they are very minute, will take up a considerable time before any report can be made to the House. Nevertheless, recommends Mr. Daniel Mylrea, who was regularly educated to the law, many years Attorney General and has been in every other post of trust and consequence in this Isle; was the Governor's deputy during absence, and acquitted himself in all with uprightness. Can answer for his zeal for H.M.'s Government. As Mr. Mylrea was Receiver General, when the Isle became vested in the Crown, it was thought proper to confer that office upon Mr. Lutwidge, and he was therefore the only person superseded, and has continued so, though the Duke of Atholl repeatedly wrote that he had the assurance of the then Ministry that he and the other officers should be provided for. 763. The SAME to the SAME.

Ireland,
v. 432,
No. 31 a, b.

His Excellency’s despatches of the 3rd and 11th January have been before H.M.’s principal servants, who have given them the fullest consideration. The utmost attention has been shown to his Excellency’s pressing and repeated instances, grounded on the wishes of the public, for the return of the Bill for limiting the duration of Parliaments, which the King approved in Council yesterday, with a few alterations agreeable to the true spirit of the Bill. The necessity of the first, regarding the preamble, must be so obvious as to require no explanation. The second is that of changing the term of seven to eight years, being better adapted to Ireland, the Parliament there usually meeting only every second year. The third, which makes the present Parliament determine on the 24th June next instead of 24th June 1774, is not only particularly agreeable to the whole spirit of the Bill, the present Parliament having already sat nearly the time marked out by this Bill as most expedient for the duration of future Parliaments, but must be considered as a most gracious condescension on the part of His Majesty, who gives his Parliament thereby an opportunity of concurring in this salutary measure, which he might otherwise carry into execution by his own undoubted prerogative.

The other two Bills for making the Judges' commissions quandiu se bene gesserint, and for the better securing the liberty of the subject, are under the consideration of the Council. His Excellency's several proposals are all of them of so new a kind as to require the most mature deliberation before any opinion can be formed concerning them.

Encloses a draft of an Act which was proposed yesterday in the House of Commons, for enabling His Majesty, his heirs and successors, to raise and keep up on the military establishment of Ireland any number of troops, consisting of His Majesty's natural-born subjects only, not exceeding in the whole in the time of peace the number of 15,235 men. His Excellency will observe that no expression is therein wanting that may demonstrate the most clear intention of Parliament that the number of forces to be kept within the kingdom of Ireland for the defence thereof shall consist of 12,331 men, commissioned and non-commissioned officers included. And as the King has declared his resolution to comply with the spirit of this Act, he has the strongest reason to expect that a measure so calculated for the welfare, peace, and safety of Ireland should, and trusts that it will, meet with the support of a majority in both Houses of Parliament in Ireland. As nothing can be done in Ireland till the Act proposed here receives the Royal assent, his Excellency is to consider with the King's servants and others in what manner the said Augmentation (as soon as the above-mentioned Act is passed) may be proposed in the House of Commons. If it fail there, his Excellency will imagine that when the King comes to reflect on certain passages in his Excellency's letters, he can be no stranger to the scandalous cause of such miscarriage. There is, however, yet time for persons to recollect themselves, to deliberate upon a plan of such utility to the public, and for that reason so earnestly espoused by His Majesty, and to reflect upon their stations and duty. His Lordship most sincerely hopes they will take advantage of the opportunity, and, especially as he is commanded to renew the assurances already made, that those who distinguish themselves in the support of that important question cannot fail of reaping in due time the fruits of their zeal for His Majesty's service, and for the real security of Ireland. A draft, marked "Confidential."

Mr. Poer has again deferred his motion, which he intended to have brought on on Tuesday last, in such a general manner as to make his Excellency believe that it will not be again resumed, because the latter is every day more and more convinced that the independent gentlemen, who have some considerable following, are resolved to go on with great moderation. Sir Charles Bingham, indeed, has mentioned in the House to-day that he means to make some motion to-morrow relative to the Septennial Bill; but as his Excellency cannot at present find on what grounds he means to proceed, or whether he will be supported, it is unnecessary to say anything more upon that subject, as it can only be mere conjecture, and as he is still in hopes to receive some explicit letter from his Lordship relative to this Bill before the House meets to-morrow, there being a packet due at this time. Marked "Private."

767. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to the EARL OF SHELBURNE.Ireland,
v. 432, No. 45.

Since his letter of the 4th, another remarkable motion has been made. Sir Charles Bingham moved that Dr. Lucas, Mr. Henry Flood, and Mr. William Ponsonby should be sent to England to lay before His Majesty the great advantages that must arise to this kingdom by passing the Bill for limiting the duration of Parliaments, and to endeavour to obviate such objections as may have been made to the said Bill. Though this motion seemed to be seriously made by Sir Charles, and was as seriously seconded by Mr. Bush, it was hardly possible to have imagined they were in earnest, till Mr. Flood endeavoured to support the motion by precedents taken from the journals in the times of James I. and Charles I., and by that means brought on a debate which lasted some hours, and at last ended in the motion being withdrawn, in order to be moved again in case the Septennial Bill should not in a very short time be returned. Mr. Prime Serjeant, in a very long and popular harangue, made to justify himself from the great abuse that has lately been flung out against him, thought proper in the strongest manner to assert, that as, on the one hand, he was resolved to give the most strenuous opposition to the intended Augmentation, so, on the other, he was determined to give every support in his power to a National Militia, either by lending his assistance to such a Bill as might be brought in, or, if that should not soon be done, by bringing one in himself. This very remarkable and public declaration as to the Augmentation was considered by the House as the fixed opinion both of Lord Shannon and Mr. Speaker, with whom he still continues to be closely connected, and from whom, of course, his Excellency has not now the smallest hopes of assistance. The Committee relative to the Military Establishment is still going on, and, having branched into several different heads of enquiry, it may still be some time before any report can be made. Cannot exactly learn to what sort of resolutions they intend to come. Marked "Confidential." 3 pp.

v. 432, No. 44.772. The SAME to the SAME.

In answer to letters of the 26th, 28th, and 30th Jan.

As to the "positive and explicit instructions" desired by his Excellency, his Lordship must observe that he has not failed from time to time to give the fullest answers to all those points on which the King's commands or the opinions of his servants were desired; and further, that his Excellency, being on the spot, and in consequence alone possessed of that variety of lights which is absolutely necessary to form a general plan for giving immediate vigour to Government, as well as being the person on whom the execution of it depends, can alone properly suggest any such for His Majesty's consideration. Accordingly, his Lordship has the King's commands to state that whatever plan he, the Lord Lieutenant, shall think proper to offer for that important end, will be taken into immediate consideration, with all the regard due to his Excellency's zeal for the King's service, not doubting that it will be accompanied with that distinct view of both men and things which is essential to the coming to a final determination upon it.

In regard to the next point, neither the King nor his servants have any predilection for any man or set of men whatever; and having nothing else in view than to conduct the King's affairs honourably and safely, to the mutual satisfaction of the Crown and people, they must naturally choose to see the public business carried on without being obliged to make any change whatsoever among his servants, as long as they are both able and willing to serve it; but if they shall prove deficient in one or other respect, so as to leave his Excellency "no reason to expect any solid support from them," His Majesty not only sees no objection, but highly approves of the sending for such gentlemen, under the description of independent gentlemen, or any other description not inconsistent with that character of duty and affection which every good subject owes the King, and who shall be believed equal to the execution of what they may be desired to undertake. If such a measure appear necessary, the result of any such communication is to be transmitted as early and particularly as possible for His Majesty's consideration.

As to what ought to be done with the Parliament, the uncertainty at this time what reception the Bill for limiting the duration of Parliaments may meet with in Ireland, makes it impossible to send particular instructions with regard to the duration of the present Parliament, till information is received of the fate of that Bill, and the consequences to be expected from it. The first motion mentioned to have been carried in the House of Commons is a melancholy proof of that want of zeal in the King's servants which his Excellency has so often lamented, and which has encouraged ill-judged reflections upon the power of the Crown, where it was only exerted for the most salutary purposes. It is scarce possible to believe that a motion such as [Mr. Poer's] is intended to be carried, without denying that wisdom to the Parliament of Ireland which has in some measure always restrained it in the times of its greatest agitation, or to hear of its being moved without expressing astonishment at so unjustifiable an attack upon the prerogative of the Crown, at a time when His Majesty is graciously pleased to anticipate the wishes of his people, and to agree to the strengthening of the constitution of that kingdom in the manner most desired. But if his Excellency should not be able by persuasions and every other conciliating method to prevent this resolution from passing, his Lordship is expressly commanded by His Majesty, with the unanimous opinion of his servants, to recommend to his Excellency the use of that power, lodged in his hands, of proroguing the Parliament as soon as such a resolution, or any to the like effect, shall have actually passed.

P.S.—The Enabling Act has passed the Committee in the House of Commons, with one slight alteration. Since writing as above, has received his Excellency's letter of Feb. 4, which makes him hope that upon the whole a better temper will take place, and that his Excellency's views for the public service will not be impeded as they have hitherto been. A draft, marked "Secret and confidential." 8 pp.

Has the satisfaction now to acquaint his Lordship that he has met with the most hearty assistance of the country gentlemen; and that they, with the Duke of Leinster and my Lord Tyrone's friends, have enabled him, for the present, entirely to defeat the designs of the other prevailing party here by putting an end to the Committee of Inquiry into the Military Establishment in such a manner as will not, his Excellency thinks, be disagreeable to His Majesty, or obstruct the augmentation. The crisis, therefore, being come, in which it appears to him absolutely necessary that His Majesty should give immediate vigour to his Government here, and being very anxious that his Lordship, for His Majesty's information, should be fully acquainted with the real state of the kingdom, he has determined to send over his Secretary, Lord Frederick Campbell, in whom he has always placed an entire confidence, and who, from being perfectly acquainted with the temper of the Parliament, and with every transaction that has happened, will be able to state all the necessary grounds for such a plan as may be effectually and immediately carried into execution.

Has this day given the Royal assent to the Octennial Bill. This Bill has given great and universal satisfaction, and will have most of the useful effects expected to arise from it. But his Excellency is much afraid, from the dissolution being fixed, that it will not so effectually promote the augmentation; it being almost impossible, immediately before a general election, to prevent the minds of men from being not only hurried away, but even irretrievably bound down, by popular prejudices. It may, perhaps, therefore, now not only be difficult, but dangerous, to push on the augmentation, because most of the best friends to this measure dare not now, as candidates, avow an additional vote of credit in order to augment a standing army. As Lord Frederick Campbell will set out on his way for London in two or three days, his Excellency will not at present go more at large into this business; but if it shall be thought advisable to propose this plan to the present Parliament, his Excellency will immediately do it in such manner as His Majesty shall direct; and in the meantime, by persuasion and every other conciliatory method, continue to dispose not only the King's servants, but all the principal interests of this country, to concur in promoting this great and necessary object. Marked "Secret and confidential." 4 pp.

A memorial presented in their name to the Earl of Shelburne, praying His Majesty's intervention to protect them against Governor Johnston, in regard to attacks made by him upon the honours, privileges, and customs secured to them by treaty and the practice of the Isle. They set forth that a theft having been committed in the house of Dr. Vilar, "Pro y Cura," of the suburb of St. Philip, he was thereupon put under arrest. He applied to the Governor for release, or to be remitted to the Vicar General of the Isle to be tried by the ecclesiastical tribunal, according to the express privilege of the clergy and the custom of the Isle. This the Governor refused; and also, in a letter to the Vicar General in answer to a similar application from him, advanced various pretensions contrary to the privileges and practices of the Isle, particularly forbidding the dependence of the clergy of Minorca on the Bishop of Majorca, in whose diocese the Island was, and threatening to banish the Vicar General if he should apply for or receive any "providencias" from that prelate.

The clergy, judging themselves aggrieved, met in Congress at Ciudadella (as customary when it was necessary to deliberate on ecclesiastical matters), and drew up a memorial, and appointed deputies to present it to the Governor, who would give no answer to it, whereupon the Congress resolved to apply to His Majesty. The 16th January, the Governor summoned the Vicar General to Mahon, which summons the latter obeyed the next day, and was accompanied voluntarily by the superior ecclesiastics who had met at Ciudadella. They were all immediately dismissed, except the Vicar General. Then the Governor said he was satisfied with his conduct, but forbade the continuance of the Congress. He further asked the Vicar General, whether he and the other ecclesiastics who had met at Ciudadella would take the oath of fidelity to His Majesty. This they all very promptly did in open court, and desired the Secretary to record the satisfaction with which they took it, and that they would have taken it at the entry of H.M.'s troops into the Island, had they been so required. 791. The SAME to the SAME.

Since Lord Frederick's departure, has endeavoured to obtain a declaration from the Speaker and Lord Shannon to support the point His Majesty has in view. The result has been that Mr. Ponsonby, although he declares himself no enemy to an augmentation, will not undertake to support this. He dwelt much on a militia, and the report of the Committee sent over. The result of the whole was, that he could not at present support the augmentation as it now stands. Lord Shannon, though he expressed great respect for the service of the Crown, yet declared frankly that he did not think the security sufficient, nor had he any prospect of the means of supporting it, and that he could not get his friends to agree to it. His Excellency had also a conversation with the Prime Serjeant, being willing to see if any of these gentlemen would come back upon the grounds of His Majesty's service. To his surprise, after what he had heard, the latter did not declare against an augmentation, but appeared not to comprehend the state of the thing that was to be proposed. His Excellency, mentioning that it was exactly the same with that opened to the King's servants at the beginning of the session, and which had long been generally known to be the plan the King wished, gave him a copy of it. He has taken time to consider it, but there is little doubt that his answer will be just the same with that received from the others, as they are too closely connected in views and situation to separate at present.

From this disposition his Lordship will see the inutility of holding a council with them upon the mode of proposing a measure they disapprove of. He thought it better, therefore, to consult only with such servants of the Crown as are decided and hearty in the King's service, whose counsel he can depend upon from their approbation of the measure; and with whom, with the aid of the independent interests and gentlemen of weight, he will hope to carry it into execution whenever His Majesty shall judge proper to have it pursued.

Both Houses of Parliament seem at present in a state of tranquillity and suspense. The very honourable support which Government has found from quarters where it was so little expected hath checked at present any steps to embarrass it. The country gentlemen are very earnest to go into their several counties to look after their elections, and yet would be sorry to leave the King's service exposed to the enterprises of ambition. Believes they in general wish to carry through the augmentation upon the most honourable footing when their elections are over; and many would, even before that, give it their best assistance, if they were assured that the weight of the Crown would not be exerted against them hereafter by those whose designs they now defeat by their zealous support of His Majesty's Government.—Dublin Castle. Marked "Confidential." 6 pp.

Is honoured with his letter, enclosing the draft of the pardon for John Morris, Esq., in order to know whether Mr. Larpet has observed the proper form in drawing it up. Will always obey the Secretary of State's commands with great readiness and pleasure; but if these papers are sent to him officially as Law Clerk, as they seem to be, it may be necessary to state that the duty of the Law Clerk is by his patent confined to the examination of persons and papers taken by the Secretary of State's warrant; and for this obvious reason, that in all other law matters the Secretary of State has, ex officio, the assistance of the Solicitor of the Treasury and the Crown Lawyers, who are paid for it, and who settled his predecessor's patent most certainly with that view. Has held his office above 20 years, and Mr. Wood will do him the justice to allow that he has never been sparing of himself on any occasion.

Therefore this explanation must not be considered as any unwillingness to obey the commands of the Secretary of State, but that in the present case it is not his duty as Law Clerk.—Charles Street, St. James's. 3 pp.

Sends the Prime Serjeant's answer upon the points mentioned in his despatch of the 26th past, in his own words, his Excellency having received it in writing. "The particular circumstances of " our present situation at the eve of a dissolution of Parliament, " and so very late in the session after the Committee of Supply has " been long closed, and at a time when applications for money have " not been usually made in Ireland, disincline many gentlemen to " concur in the proposed augmentation; and the sufficiency of the " security under the late Act is also doubted by many, who think " that the words 'it is expedient' do not relate to future times and " altered circumstances."

In consequence of this answer, his Excellency did not think it advisable either to invite him or the persons mentioned in the last despatch to the confidential meeting which was held, and which consisted of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Annaly, the Solicitor General, Lord Chief Baron Forster, Mr. Malone, and the Provost. It was their opinion that the best way to bring the measure before Parliament would be by a message from the Crown; and that His Majesty's answer to the address of the House of Commons might be a part of this message, in which might be mentioned at the same time such regulations as His Majesty might make relating to the army, and such a declaration of the intention of the Crown, corresponding with the spirit of the Act, as His Majesty should think proper. They thought the security would be sufficient without an Irish Act; that a Committee would follow, and that this would be good ground for those who approved to support the measure. At the same time, they could not but observe that there might be great difficulty to get a sufficient number of members to attend closely to the question so late in the session,—the independent gentlemen in particular, who in general at another time would lend their assistance, being now intent to secure their elections; and if pains were taken by designing men to render an augmentation and a new vote of credit at this unusual stage of Parliament unpopular, these gentlemen might be deterred by political tests (too commonly put to candidates in Ireland) from espousing this measure; at least, they might be influenced from attending. There is hardly a county where there is not a contest, and where specious topics embarrassing to Government may not be agitated by men who may have particular views in proposing them. For these reasons they would humbly submit to His Majesty whether this measure might not be proposed with more advantage and certainty in a new Parliament which might be called upon the necessity for it, and which would only make a break of one year in the order of Parliaments. This step does not appear to break in upon the revenue or any system of Irish affairs. Nor does it in its consequences to them appear liable to any other inconvenience than the presence of a Lord Lieutenant somewhat sooner than the usual time. The revenue would also in the interim be greatly increased by the consumption arising from the ensuing election.

His Excellency is persuaded that there is not one of these very respectable men whom he has consulted but will support his Majesty's service with a true and becoming zeal, and that he may expect an honourable support from them during the remainder of the sessions. His opinion of the good intentions of the independent gentlemen in Parliament has been confirmed by an instance of respect for the Crown on the part of Mr. Pery, who has laid aside for the present a motion leading to an augmentation of the salary of the Commissioners of Appeal, on being informed that Lord Frederick Campbell had directions to lay the same before H.M.'s servants in England. Marked "Confidential." 5½ pp.

v. 432, No. 82.801. The SAME to the SAME.

Received this day several printed copies of the Enabling Act, the substance of which he had before communicated to the principal persons here in order to prevent any unfavourable impressions which might have been made against the augmentation. It will greatly contribute to the success of this measure if his Majesty shall make any military regulations which may afford ground for the support of it to the Duke of Leinster and Lord Tyrone's friends, who will thereupon be very zealous in giving their assistance. It will be seen from the newspapers printed here what pains are taken to procure addresses against the measure. Nothing material has passed in Parliament since the 5th, except that leave was granted to bring in heads of a Bill for a repeal of the statute of Henry VII., which directs that the Chancellor and Treasurer, Judges of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, the Chief and Second Baron of the Exchequer, the Clerk or Master of the Rolls, and all officers accountants, shall have their offices only at the King's will and pleasure. But upon it being represented to the gentleman that moved it that if this Act were to take place it would probably prevent the great offices of Master of the Rolls and Chancellor of the Exchequer being granted to the natives of Ireland, the experience of the session being sufficient to prove how little it is for the interest of the Crown to have more independent great offices here, he engaged not to proceed further in it.

Has endeavoured to prevail upon the Speaker to keep the House sitting, and forward the Revenue Bill, but fears the recess must take place to-morrow or the beginning of next week. In that case, will endeavour to bring gentlemen together again as early as possible after the assizes to receive this measure if it is to be proposed to them. Marked "Confidential." 3½ pp.

Others of the enclosures relate to a complaint by the inhabitants of great violence and hardship used in quartering an officer upon an inhabitant of Aleyor, as well as of a new regulation relating to quarters made by H.M.'s Lieut. was forced from the latter, under a threat of committal, that he was under a point of honour to Lord Viscount Beauchamp to part with all of the emoluments above 200*l.* for a year or session, to some person unknown. The Committee resolved that the several fees and sums appointed by the House for its clerks were in consideration of their services, and intended for the sole use of them, and of no other person whatever. To which the House agreed, and further resolved that Dr. Gayer was bound by a point of honour to Viscount Beauchamp to part with all the emoluments of his office, except 200*l.*, to a person unknown; and that this last sum appeared to the House sufficient for the person exercising the office of Clerk of the Parliaments, and that the Lord Lieutenant ought not to be addressed for more than that sum.

Shortly to inform him of the King's pleasure upon the points contained in his letters of the 18th and 26th of February and 5th March, as Lord Frederick Campbell has some thoughts of returning by way of Scotland. Lord Frederick will be able to give more particulars, as he, Lord Shelburne, has not only conversed with him, but he also attended a meeting of the King's servants when the affairs of Ireland were under consideration.

The King's principal servants were unanimous in the opinion that the reasons offered for postponing the augmentation to another session were not sufficient after the several steps that have been taken, particularly that of the Act of Parliament passed in England. His Majesty therefore directs that the same be proposed in the House of Commons, and by message from the Lord Lieutenant, as on former augmentations this mode has mostly been followed. His Excellency will use the preamble of the English Act, or such others as he shall think more proper, taking care only in regard to the point of security to keep within the words of his Lordship's letter of 5th November last, "as far as" is consistent with such a defence as the safety of both kingdoms "in case of any sudden or extraordinary emergency may require."

Sends a most gracious answer from His Majesty to the address of the House of Commons of 16 Feb., transmitting the Report of their Committee of Inquiry into the military establishment, which was put immediately into the hands of H.M.'s military servants, who have no doubt but that it may be the foundation for some useful alterations, although it is impossible for them to determine upon them finally till there is time for a due examination into the military service in Ireland. It is needless to observe that it is His Majesty's object by this augmentation to remedy some of the very inconveniences pointed out by this Report. The King will agree that, provided the pay for the proposed establishment takes place on the 25th of this month at latest, the execution of the plan shall not be begun till Dec. 1, which will enable money enough to accumulate to answer all the expenses of levy money, extra clothing and arms, and also that the regiments shall furnish the detachments for the Isle of Man, and consequently only pay five regiments on foreign stations. The grateful sense which the House of Commons must have of the repeated instances of his Majesty's condescension and goodness, and the attention he is inclined to show to their late address, which cannot but be highly flattering to those independent gentlemen who proposed it, persuade his Lordship that when this measure comes to be proposed on its own bottom, all parties will be happy to join in showing their duty to the King, and that regard which is incumbent upon them to the security of the kingdom.

In answer to what his Excellency says, that the country gentlemen would give their best assistance to this measure, provided they were assured "that the weight of the Crown would not be exerted against them hereafter by those whose designs they now "defeat," is to say that it is by no means the King's intention at present that his Excellency should leave the kingdom; and that those who have exerted themselves at this time in support of the King's Government may be assured that they may depend on its future protection.

Upon account of the approaching assizes in different parts of the kingdom, so many members of the House of Commons absented themselves from Dublin that it was with great difficulty a House was made for transacting the ordinary business. Judged it proper, therefore, to press the Revenue Bill through the common forms, and then to adjourn the House till the 19th of next month. Was for making the recess as short as possible, but Mr. Speaker urging that if gentlemen were brought to town before the assizes were fully ended they might possibly return in ill-humour, he thought it best to give them a long day. The House of Lords was adjourned at the same time; and both Houses expressed great pleasure at this temporary relaxation. On the 7th of this month, the Earl of Carrick (a nobleman who on many occasions has distinguished himself in support of Government) moved a resolution, which was agreed to without a division, calculated for the very good purpose of restraining that profusion of grants in the Money Bill which for some years past the House of Commons has made for public works. Has this day received an account of the death of Daniel Lace, Esq., one of H.M.'s Deemsters of this Isle. This is an office which cannot be long vacant without inconvenience to himself as Governor, and to the country in general. Whenever a Deemster was indisposed and incapable of doing the duty of his office, the Governor was always obliged to appoint a deputy, and in case of death to give a commission to a successor pro tempore. For the two Deemsters, in their respective districts, are the Judges of the Common Law, hear and determine actions of debt, trespass, &c., in a summary way, are of H.M.'s Council in the Isle, assistants to the Governor in the Court of Chancery and on other occasions, and are Justices of the Peace, and in this complicate office constantly employed in one public business or other. Reminds his Lordship of his recommendation of Mr. Daniel Mylrea to succeed the late Attorney General; yet as, from the contents of his, the Governor's, letter No. 2, it may be presumed that His Majesty hath appointed another to that office, now recommends that gentleman to succeed the late Deemster Lace. Will only add that Mr. Mylrea is master of the Manx language, which is most essential for the discharge of that office.—Isle of Man. "No. 3." 3 pp.

proposed, which will, therefore, be charged to the revenue at large. The premiums on the inland carriage of corn to Dublin in the two years to Lady Day 1767 amounted to upwards of 15,000*l*. If notice should not be taken of the practice of charging such expenses on the revenue at large, without making an augmentation to that revenue, such Bills may in time be considered as ruling precedents. In the present case these Bills were not introduced until it was so late in the session that no particular provision could be made for the expense but by a vote of credit, for which the amount of the charge seems to be too small. But if these Bills be passed into law, and if it be thought proper, a proposal may be made in the next session for a separate provision, not only for the bounties and salaries now to be established, but for all such others as have already been granted by Parliament, and made payable out of the revenues at large.

The gentlemen who carried these Bills through the House, introduced them without any intimation of any sort to his Excellency of any part of their intentions, as is often the case upon other material matters. Marked "Private." 4 pp.

Though His Majesty's thorough confidence in his Grace's vigilance and activity makes it almost superfluous to remind him of any part of his duty, yet the very unseemly and riotous disposition which broke out yesterday among the common people after the election at Brentford makes highly incumbent the signification of His Majesty's pleasure that precaution be taken in order to prevent a continuance of these riotous proceedings. It is needless to observe that it will be highly improper to take any steps that may show suspicion and alarm unless there be very substantial reasons; yet if there should appear any grounds to fear this matter going any considerable length, it is the King's pleasure that orders be given to the proper persons to be prepared for such an event, and to call for military force if absolutely necessary. At present there is not the least dispute subsisting between the Emperor of Morocco, or any of his subjects, and us; and his Imperial Majesty seems inclined to continue in this disposition. This convention between the Moors and Spaniards can by no means be advantageous to England, and he would gladly embrace any opportunity of setting them at variance again, if he thought it would be approved of at home, especially as the Spaniards are doing everything in their power to give the Moors an ill impression of us.—Gibraltar Bay. 2½ pp.

“ Lord Weymouth has been informed that Mr. Stuart, the wine merchant, upon application to you for assistance against the mob on the night of the illumination, had not met with that support which he had reason to expect from the civil magistrate. Though this account does not agree with what his Lordship had conceived of your vigilance and activity, yet he has ordered me to acquaint you with it, and to add that though, on the one hand, he relies much on your zeal, and is ready to do justice to your diligence at the time of the late riotous proceedings, yet, on the other, he thinks it his indispensable duty to take notice of any remissness in a magistrate upon whom so much of the public order and tranquillity depends; and if Mr. Stuart's account of this matter be founded, his Lordship desires that I will let you know it will very much change that favourable opinion which he wishes to preserve of you. His Lordship thinks it would be unfair towards you as well as to the public to keep this matter from you, though Mr. Stuart has not given it in as matter of formal complaint, but merely for the Secretary of State's information. Lord Weymouth is willing to suppose there must be some mistake in what he has heard.

“ P.S.—As Lord Weymouth had taken every precaution that could be imagined in order to support magistracy and give weight to your proceedings, he is disappointed to find that there should be any complaint; and though he despises clamour he must pay attention to facts urged by a citizen of character; and I heartily wish you may put it in his power to set you clear of imputation, which is his wish also."

The reply to this letter is dated the 5th.

Sir John Fielding gives a history of the transactions of the night, and says that, to the best of his knowledge, and to the best of his abilities, with unwearied attention, diligence, and application, he has done everything in his power to preserve peace and good order, and to detect offenders and bring them to justice, from the beginning to the conclusion of the late unhappy disturbances. Is sincerely concerned if in any respect Mr. Steward mistook his meaning, and more so that Lord Weymouth should be dissatisfied with his conduct as a magistrate. Unfortunate he has always been; at present particularly so, when his warmest endeavours to discharge a public trust with loyalty to his Sovereign, fidelity to his country, and obedience to his superiors have been so far ineffectual as not to secure him the confidence of those by whom he would wish to be approved.—Bow Street.

831. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to the EARL OF SHELburne.

Lord Frederick Campbell arrived last Thursday, from whom his Excellency received such further lights upon the sentiments of the King's servants as it was judged proper he should bring. Thought it unnecessary, as everybody was before engaged in their elections, to communicate till his Lordship's arrival the determination of His Majesty that the Augmentation should be laid before Parliament. No instructions from other counties have hitherto followed the example of those from the county of Dublin; and as most of the assizes have been held, has great hopes that the acclamations upon the gracious marks of His Majesty's favour will not be turned into an opposition to this measure calculated for its preservation. Nothing shall be wanting on his part to carry His Majesty's orders into execution exactly as he is commanded. Nor will he again trouble His Majesty's servants with any further representation, however earnestly it is the general wish of every person here, from the highest to the lowest, that this Parliament should instantly be dissolved, and the Augmentation be proposed in the next, which might meet in the month of June or July next, where men would be at liberty to act freely, and where no other material business need be gone into. Can have no doubts when he receives His Majesty's commands; and hopes to be pardoned if, when he humbly laid before him the sentiments of the principal persons and circumstances of Ireland, he has appeared tedious. The only motive for being so particular was that His Majesty might the better judge of the event. Will esteem it one of the most fortunate periods of his life if any credit which he may have derived from the high situation assigned to him, or from the communication of the most gracious marks of the King's Royal favour to the people, may enable him to contribute to the success of His Majesty's service.

Has received within these few days several letters from Newcastle, giving an account of a very riotous spirit having broken out among the sailors and other persons in that place and its neighbourhood, who have committed many outrages, a continuance of which is still greatly to be apprehended. His Grace enters into full particulars. The Mayor and other magistrates of Newcastle, and the justices of Northumberland and Durham, have been very vigilant and active on this occasion, but it is their united request, in which his Grace joins, that a regiment might be quartered and continued in Newcastle and the neighbourhood.—Northumberland House, 12 April.

But as there are objections to depositing those arms now in the Tower, his Grace is to take all possible precautions for the present by giving the necessary orders for particular attention and vigilance upon this occasion; and in case of an attempt by the populace to possess themselves of the arms, is to call out the military, orders having been issued to the Secretary-at-War to support the civil magistrate upon every necessary occasion.

The House of Commons met this day, when Lord Frederick Campbell presented his Excellency's message concerning the Augmentation, a copy of which is enclosed, and which is to be considered in a Committee of the whole House on the 2nd of May, on which day the House is to be called over. As there was no business depending, Lord Frederick had directions, in order to prevent any disagreeable motions that were expected, to signify his Excellency's pleasure to the House to adjourn till May 2. But this was opposed on the pretence that the Militia Bill could not be considered; and though no instance could be produced of a negative given to a message of this kind coming in form from Government, the House was divided upon it; it was, however, carried in the affirmative, — 80 to 46. Wishes he could form any judgment of the success of the main question; but at present there is a strong appearance of opposition to it. Believes many who wish well to His Majesty's service will be afraid to support it, on the eve of a general election, with that zeal that

His Excellency will have received by the return of the messenger such Bills as have been approved in Council. The Bill for the better securing the liberty of the subject has not been thought proper to be returned, from the opinion of all H.M.'s law servants that its provisions are not yet safe in Ireland, where the Roman Catholic religion is still so prevalent, and where there is not yet such a check on riots and disorders, which are but too frequent from their not being, in certain cases, capital offences as in England by stat. 1 Geo. I. cap. 5., whereas in Ireland they remain only misdemeanours at common law. This Bill likewise goes further than that sent over in 1766, by transcribing from the Act of 31 Car. II. certain clauses declaring it false imprisonment where any inhabitant or resident of Ireland shall be sent prisoner to England or elsewhere out of Ireland, and giving damages not under 500*l.*, with the exception only of such resident being sent for trial to another country if he should have committed a capital offence there. Letters, reports, and affidavits relating to the case of three soldiers, John Styles, James Oliver, and James Owen, who were convicted before Mr. Justice Willes at Exeter, and sentenced to death, for a rape, attended with many atrocious and affecting circumstances. It finally comes out that in one particular regarding herself the prosecutrix had committed perjury on the trial, but nothing appears to lessen the atrocity of the crime. The Judge, nevertheless, desired to prevent "so dreadful a carnage" (p. 188) as the death of the three criminals, but could not point out any one for mercy. At first the clergy and gentlemen of the army at Exeter were very much at variance with each other on the occasion (p. 189), but afterwards worked in concert (p. 234), and at last were so fully convinced of the prosecutrix's perjury that they most ardently and sincerely wished His Majesty's mercy might be extended to all the prisoners rather than be confined to any one or two of them (p. 239). The last letter (p. 240) from Lord Weymouth to Mr. Justice Willes concludes thus:—"His Majesty well remembers that under your last reprieve their

862. The SAME to the SAME.

Yesterday the House of Commons resolved itself into a Committee of the whole House to consider his message of the 19th; to which Mr. Conolly made the enclosed motion for an address to His Majesty, and was seconded by Mr. Thos. Dawson, knight of the shire for the county of Monaghan. The reason of his Excellency's concurring in this address was the certain intelligence he had received that, after the utmost canvassing on each side, the numbers would run very near, and that there was no other chance of obtaining a majority than the holding out the strongest security that this country should not at any time be left with less than 12,000 men within it, except in the case of an actual invasion or rebellion in Great Britain. Was the more inclined to give way to an address of this sort, as he was certain that the whole turned upon the answer His Majesty would give to the demand. Is very sorry, however, to say that, notwithstanding every effort which was made, and every support given by the country gentlemen, who, to secure the success of this measure, had advised to have it postponed to another session, the address was rejected by 108 against 104. A motion was then made for an address to his Excellency, setting forth the inability of the country to bear the additional expense of this augmentation; but it being then two o'clock in the morning, that motion was not gone into. The chairman not being directed to ask leave to sit again, the Committee, of course, was closed. This day the enclosed motion was made, which is considerably altered from that proposed before, and which, after a debate lasting from three in the afternoon till nine at night, was at last carried by 105 against 101.

It is impossible for him immediately to submit to His Majesty's consideration what may be necessary to be done in support of those who have during the whole of this session uniformly supported Government, or in resentment to those who have as uniformly obstructed the carrying into execution His Majesty's intentions. Will only say at present that the Earl of Shannon, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Prime Serjeant, Mr. Attorney General, and Mr. Serjeant Dennis have, both in public and in private, taken every method, by themselves and by their friends, to defeat the measure. Will very soon, however, lay his sentiments before His Majesty upon this important business. A motion of the same sort with that which was first proposed in the House of Commons was this day moved in the House of Lords by Lord Carrick (whose zeal for His Majesty's service his Excellency cannot too highly commend), and was carried by 49 against 9. Not having as yet seen the Chancellor, it is impossible at present for him to send the address, or to say exactly what passed in that House.—Dublin Castle.

Hopes he will have received the seven Bills returned by the messenger. The Bill for the encouragement of tillage and navigation by granting a bounty on the carriage of corn coastwise has been returned with the alteration of being made temporary. If a Bill should be proposed in the next Parliament for the continuance of this bounty, it is expected that care will be taken to make some other provision without breaking into H.M.'s hereditary revenue, which should not be touched without previously knowing His Majesty's pleasure. The Bill to enable Papists to lend money to Protestants on mortgages of lands, &c. in Ireland, has been far from being disapproved by the Council; but as some of the Council suggested certain effects it would have in regard to the system of laws against Popery, as well as some other dangerous consequences, and as his Excellency had not written anything on the subject, it was thought more secure to let it go over to another session, when, in the meanwhile, His Majesty may be informed more particularly of the grounds on which it was proposed, and the sentiments of principal persons upon it. A draft, marked "Private." 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ pp.

The confusion is still increasing. The sailors have this morning completed what was before unfinished with respect to unmanning and otherwise disabling all the ships in the river from sailing. One only attempted to escape, but unsuccessfully. They have appointed Stepney Fields for their rendezvous, where about 5,000 or 6,000 are now assembled. The watermen have likewise been pressing all their corps to join them, and this morning the coal-heavers have taken the same resolution. They have given out that they intend by and bye to pay a visit to the Corn Market in Mark Lane, which causes much confusion there.—Navy Office, "near 12 o'clock."

The letter to Lord Weymouth. The origin of those disturbances appears most certainly to be that of Newcastle; and from the advantages (which for want of power could not be prevented) obtained by them at that place, they are encouraged to make this dangerous attempt here. The consequence has been a total stagnation of trade on the river. In regard to the article of wages, there can be no stipulated contract on that account. The trade and shipping is so much reduced, that there are few or none that proceed upon a voyage, allowing for the decrease of capital, but

Suggests amendment of the Provision Bill by extending the importation, and of the Seamen's Act, "in the merchant service, to the support of which, every seaman, when employed, pays 6*l.* per month; but at present is by much inadequate to the many claimants." Something of this sort might do service, and "keep at least the marine of the kingdom pacifique, with the assistance of Providence by plentiful seasons."

871. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to the EARL OF [SHELburne].

Proposes, as soon as the Bills which remain to be returned from England shall have been transmitted hither and passed through the Houses, to prorogue Parliament to some short day previous to June 24th next, when it will be determined. From the day on which the Royal assent was given to the Octennial Bill, the gentlemen have been almost totally employed in soliciting votes and interest. Many of the counties and boroughs are strongly contested, and considerable sums of money have been already lavished, to the great encouragement of idleness and riot amongst the common people, and to the great injury of the private fortunes of the candidates. It is, therefore, highly important to put a stop to these mischiefs, which can only be done by the immediate dissolution of the present, and issuing writs for a new Parliament as soon as possible. This is most ardently desired and recommended, not only by His Majesty's principal servants, but by other persons of the first weight and distinction. Concurring with them in opinion that it will not only save the country from becoming a scene of dissipation and animosity, but be received as a peculiar mark of His Majesty's goodness, proposes that the Parliament be dissolved on the day next after the prorogation, and writs for a new one issued as soon as proper Bills can be transmitted from the Council to England as the cause for calling a new Parliament, and to be offered to each House as usual at the opening of the session, and returned under the Great Seal of Great Britain with His Majesty's commission for calling a new Parliament. As the writs will not be returnable in less than 40 days, there will be sufficient time for His Majesty to determine whether the new Parliament shall assemble upon the return of the writs, or be prorogued from time to time, as was done in 1761 on the accession of His Majesty.—Dublin Castle.

872. The SAME to the SAME.

Is confident that when the King comes to reflect on certain passages in his Excellency's letters, he can be no stranger to the scandalous cause of the miscarriage of his gracious intentions for the public service and the particular security of Ireland;—the more so from the manner in which this matter was laid before the Committee. It was clearly made out that, so far from any additional vote of credit being wanted, the money already voted would be sufficient until the meeting of Parliament again in the usual course, to answer the whole expense of the estimate enclosed, marked A., which was in that manner proposed to the House. The enclosed estimate marked B. will explain why no vote of credit was necessary. And when it is considered that the expenses of Government therein are put upon the highest calculation, and the revenue upon the lowest, it will be seen that no reasonable doubt could be entertained on that head; particularly as, from the enclosed comparison marked G. of the nine months ending at Christmas 1766 with the nine months ending at Christmas 1767, the revenues, even under their present management, are increasing to a considerable degree. It is impossible to explain the state of the country more fully than has been already done in his letters, and through Lord Frederick Campbell. From these representations His Majesty will be convinced upon what grounds many of the leading interests of this kingdom have hitherto undertaken to carry on H.M.'s affairs; and why, when difficulties have arisen or been artificially created, Government has generally been defeated by its own strength. At all events, this last shameful refusal cannot leave a doubt in His Majesty's mind on the subject. That the King may know how many of his principal servants and of those peculiarly indebted to his goodness have ventured to support the interest and ambition of a few individuals, has sent the (three) enclosed lists, taken with all possible exactness, setting forth in what manner the several members voted who could by any means be prevailed upon to attend this important question. As he formerly ventured, through Lord Frederick Campbell, to submit to the King and his servants his opinion that the most effectual means to restore vigour to this Government would be keeping Ireland under the constant attention of a resident Governor, in whose hands ought to be placed, subject to the control of H.M.'s Treasury in England, the absolute disposal of the several offices of the revenue, so is now confirmed more and more in that opinion, from the great weight some of the Commissioners have been able to exert over several members who are at present officers under them, and whose conduct on this occasion cannot otherwise be accounted for. But as these are remedies which can only operate by degrees, if approved of, cannot help wishing to know whether some persons in the different branches of the service ought not to be immediately marked as the particular objects of His Majesty's displeasure. For his own part, will only say that amongst those who, during this remarkable session, have supported the King's Government with constancy and firmness, without so much as hinting at any consideration, there are many men of the first abilities, of the greatest integrity and property, who, if changes be thought necessary, could be recommended to His Majesty as servants who would carry on public business with safety and credit. Can say this with the greatest certainty, because, after having repeatedly given their advice to postpone the augmentation till their elections should be over, and themselves at liberty, yet, from the instant they knew the King's determination to try this measure immediately (which in principle appeared to them right), they did, in public and in private, with their interests and abilities, at the hazard of their elections, give the utmost support to carrying it. In this point, indeed, they have not been able to succeed; yet with uncommon application they have hitherto been able to resist the temper of the people in general from breaking out into violence,—which factious and interested men, by great management, thought themselves secure of. Is not without hopes, too, that when it shall be observed that His Majesty's disapprobation is strongly shown to the principal opposers of so salutary a measure, the tide of popular resentment will be directed against those who have endeavoured to direct it against Government itself. Has in the private letter of this date submitted to His Majesty's consideration some of those gentlemen who ought, he thinks, immediately to be the objects of his favour; the doing which at this time will give great force to the Government here, which has hitherto been defeated by the weight and through the interests of a few individuals who have consulted their own consequence more than the honour and dignity of the Crown. Amongst the few things which his Excellency has had in his power to dispose of, he has only consulted the great objects of His Majesty's wishes; and neither in the promises to recommend, nor in the assurances to the independent gentlemen which he was authorised by the letter of Feb. 10 to make, has he once suffered anything but the merit of those who exerted themselves in the support of Government to have the least effect upon him.

P.S.—To show the increase of trade between Ireland and the Plantations since the last war, has sent the enclosed paper, marked C., which was very fully stated in the House of Commons.—Dublin Castle.

A printed "Scheme for the Military Establishment of Ireland, and Estimate of the expence for augmenting it to 15,235 men," and the enclosures mentioned. A. is headed, "Reasons for having fixed the 1st of January 1769 for placing the intended augmented numbers on the Irish Establishment." There are lists of the members who voted for and against the augmentation, and of those who were absent, with the places which any of them held. 33 pp. and 6 pp. of print.

Ireland,
v. 433,
Nos. 45, 46.

The two "private letters" of this date alluded to in the preceding. In the first, his Excellency recommends the grant of the dignity of an Earl to Lord Viscount Kingston; of a Viscount to Barons Blayney, Mounteagle, and Gore; of a Baron to the following members of Parliament, who are persons of considerable property, viz., Abraham Creighton, John Eyre, and Dudley Alexander Sidney Cosby, Esquires; and of a Baronet to James Nugent, Esq., (recommended by Lord Clare,) John Freake, Esq., (recommended by the Earl of Arran,) and Edward Loftus, Esq., a member of Parliament. His Excellency requests that the King's pleasure upon these recommendations may be signified as soon as convenient, that the same may be generally known before the Parliament is prorogued.

In the other private letter his Excellency says that he cannot but be very anxious to have some mark of His Majesty's favour conferred on the family of the Earl of Tyrone and his brother, Mr. John

Beresford; both of whom, by themselves, their relations, and their friends, most zealously supported His Majesty's measures at this critical conjuncture, and who were the first persons to declare their fixed resolution to give all the assistance in their power to the augmentation when his Majesty's determination was known. But as no immediate opportunity occurs of distinguishing Lord Tyrone's services as they deserve, his Excellency entreats that Mr. Beresford may be immediately appointed of H.M.'s Privy Council in Ireland. Also that the like mark of favour be extended to three other members of the House of Commons who have given the utmost assistance, and who from their characters and estates are very deserving; viz., Sir Henry Cavendish, Sir Thomas Maude, and Sir Henry Deane, Barts. 4 pp.

Has received his letter of the 7th, and will wait with great impatience for the arrival of the last transmiss, which was to leave London on Thursday last. The alteration in the Bill for the encouragement of tillage and navigation, &c., is, in his opinion, extremely proper. The Bill to enable Papists to lend money to Protestants on mortgages of lands in this kingdom was introduced by Lord Annaly. The letter which accompanied it from the Privy Council contained all the reasons which were thought necessary here for explaining its use and tendency. Did not think it necessary to write a separate letter himself upon it; it not being usual for the Lord Lieutenant singly to write explanations upon Bills, unless they carry something extraordinary which may require it. Had he known of any objections on the other side time enough to have given an answer to them, would have applied not only to Lord Annaly, but to other persons of knowledge, for further information. If it is pointed out what particular explanations are wanting, will take care to have the subject reconsidered in due time, and stated in the fullest and clearest manner, in order to have the Bill resumed in another session. Lord Weymouth to the Lord Mayor of London. Has just been informed that the tailors intend to assemble to-morrow morning, and go round to the several masters in London to compel their journeymen to join them, in order to oblige the trade to raise their present rate of wages. Is persuaded his Lordship will take every measure possible to prevent the rising.

Mr. William Fraser to Sir John Fielding. With information to the same effect. Lord Weymouth desires that he and the rest of the justices will do their utmost to prevent the rising; but cannot give more particulars, either as to the place of rendezvous or hour of meeting.

Same to the Same, "late at night." Lord Weymouth approves of his proposal of endeavouring, with the rest of the magistrates, to dissuade the tailors from going to the House to-morrow in the very large body of which they are expected to consist, and, by every argument he can devise, to try to prevail on them to disperse. To do the like also with the coopers, who have the same intention of assembling to-morrow, and for the very same motives.

884. SIR JOHN FIELDING to MR. FRASER.

Every possible step was taken this morning by the magistrates, not only to prevent the meeting of the tailors by going themselves to the houses of call, but to disperse them when met in Lincoln's Inn Fields; but in vain. The magistrates, being defeated in this point, went in a body with the peace officers to Westminster, and stopped the whole body near Guildhall, and persuaded a great number to go into the Hall, where they agreed to send six persons only with their petition to the House of Commons, which consisted of two parts, the first requesting the repeal of a late Act relative to tailors, the second to raise their wages. Every member refusing to accept of the petition whilst the tumultuous assembly was there, the journeymen tailors went away gradually, and, he dares say, will never meet again in the same manner.

His Majesty approves of the several recommendations contained in his Excellency's private letters (45 and 46) of 10th inst. It is also His Majesty's pleasure that Mr. Bligh, late Lieutenant General, be acquainted that the King took particular notice of his name on this occasion, and that it confirmed his good opinion of that gentleman's disinterestedness and honourable conduct. The clearness of his Excellency's last despatch, and the state of the revenue, gave the King the greatest satisfaction. He, however, could not read over the list of those persons who voted against this salutary measure without being surprised to see that so many of his principal servants, and of those who are peculiarly indebted to his goodness, abusing the mildness and the tenderness of his government hitherto, should have ventured to support the interest and ambition of a few individuals against the public good. His Excellency's suggestions have, therefore, been referred to the consideration of H.M.'s principal servants, who will also submit their opinion upon the expediency of assembling the new Parliament immediately for the despatch of business, in order to renew the proposal of the Augmentation, the grounds and reasons for which have suffered no variation. Meanwhile, his Excellency is to transmit his ideas at large on the changes likely to produce the desired effects, and to point out particularly those persons who have most deserved signal marks of His Majesty's disapprobation, as well as those fittest to replace them, and any other arrangements which he may think wisest and best. —Whitehall. A draft, marked "Private." 6 $\frac{1}{4}$ pp.

893. LORD WEYMOUTH to the HON. MR. JUSTICE BATHURST.

In consequence of his letter of the 5th inst., enclosing the petition of William Townsend, signed and recommended by a great number of persons, the case was referred to Mr. Justice Yates, who made a favourable report, when the free pardon was immediately signed by the King, and sent without delay to the Clerk of Assize; but by a letter from the Under Sheriff, it appears that he was transported so long ago as the 30th March. His Lordship writes this letter that it may be clearly understood that there has not been the smallest delay in his office since the receipt of the petition, and that the poor man not having obtained the mercy intended for him was entirely owing to the petition not having been sent till above a month after his sentence was put in execution.

894. LORD BARRINGTON to MR. WOOD.

The bearer, Bell, who has been extremely useful in managing the seamen, says that a number of rascals of that profession (under a hundred) unrigged two or three ships yesterday, and intend to-morrow to begin the former riots. The good seamen, he says, are quiet, and are not inclined to be otherwise. Such risings should be stopped at the beginning.

The mayor and jurats of Tenterden, in the county of Kent, have represented that on the 20th or 21st inst. an incendiary paper had been fixed on the sign-post of the White Lion Inn there, and many more of the like import on the sign-posts and church doors of several of the neighbouring parishes, inciting the poor people of that country to meet at Wood Church Green on the 30th inst. in order to raise a "mob," and to force the farmers to sell their wheat to the millers or poor people at 10*l.* a load, and threatening to destroy the mills of such millers as should give above the said price. A detachment is to be ordered to march from Romney or other convenient place to the assistance of the magistrates if required.—Whitehall.

Dom. Entry Bk.,

Present their acknowledgments for Lord Weymouth's very obliging attention to the Company's welfare. There were no other acts of violence committed on board the Company's ships than the crews being daily forced, against their inclination, to join the riots, and each night they returned voluntarily to their respective ships.

The disturbances on the river had apparently subsided from Saturday evening, the 14th, upon which some ships sailed down the river, having complied with the exorbitant wages of 40*s.* per month, and the committee of the Company (considering the very critical situation of their affairs, that several days of shipping the cargoes had been lost, and that the Company's sailors, though well disposed in themselves to accept of moderate wages, had been threatened that they should not depart from London for less than the prices that had been stipulated by the majority,) found themselves under the absolute necessity of complying with the unreasonable demand of 40*s.* per month. Immediately upon the acquiescence in these terms, all business on board the Company's ships has been conducted with the utmost decorum, and the cargoes fully completed. The Company's ships are now proceeding on their voyage with the utmost expedition.

The coalheavers also intend to insult the coal-meters as they come on shore about six o'clock this evening. Recommending the matter to their care and attention. Acknowledging a letter, &c. Mr. Sampson's Chancellor must have been mistaken in his representation of the affairs of the Portuguese, as there were nine of those unhappy people instead of eight, and the particulars were exactly as he has stated them in the enclosed memorial, a copy of which he transmitted with his letter of 24 June last. Highness a more friendly disposition to the English nation than when he was there last. According to orders of the Lords of the Admiralty, has sent the four Turks who made their escape on board the "Jersey" and "Montreal" back to their own country,—two to Tripoli, with the Tripoline Ambassador, and two to Algiers, with a letter to the Dey expressing satisfaction at having the opportunity of testifying his friendship and regard for his Highness and his subjects by recovering two of them from slavery. Three months before he also wrote to Mr. Fraser, acquainting him of the protection shown to these people, in order that he might make a merit of it with the Dey.

Apprehends that it would have been more regular if the demand for sums expended by Adams and Co. at Santa Cruz for the redemption of the "Pitt's" crew had been satisfied by the Governor of Gibraltar. Has himself, however, paid them, as stated in his letter of 9 Jan. last, and also a further demand of 5*l*. A Committee was appointed for preparing Bills to be transmitted to England as the causes for calling a new Parliament, of which a Money Bill was to be one; and such Bill was unanimously agreed upon, and a Bill for allowing further time for persons in office to qualify;—which two Bills will be reported and taken into consideration on Thursday next,—Dublin Castle. 1½ pp.

906. The SAME to the SAME.

Expresses his satisfaction that his several recommendations have met with His Majesty's entire approbation, because he is sure those persons have been eminently assisting in carrying into execution His Majesty's wishes for an augmentation, and will upon every occasion continue to exert their utmost interest in the support of the King's measures and government. Has acquainted Mr. Bligh, late Lieutenant General, that the King took particular notice of his name; for which distinguished mark of attention Mr. Bligh desires, with all duty and respect, to return his most grateful acknowledgements.

Upon the determination of the points suggested by his Excellency as the most effectual means of restoring vigour to H.M.'s Government in Ireland, and which have been referred by the King to the consideration of his principal servants, turns every mode of alteration which his Excellency's mind can suggest for the better management of Ireland, and therefore he depends upon his Lordship's sending him the result of their deliberations as soon as possible, because till then it will not be in his power to give any sound advice.

This is now the crisis of Irish Government. If a system is at this time wisely formed and steadily pursued, His Majesty's affairs may hereafter be carried on with ease, with dignity and safety. But if only a few changes are to be made here and there, and this particular man is to be raised, and another depressed, possibly to be restored in a few months with double power and weight, as in 1755, it will only add fuel to the fire, and at last bring the King's authority in Ireland, low as it is, into still greater contempt. If the plan which he has proposed in his letter of the 10th inst. shall be adopted, and the King and his servants shall have that confidence in him as to think him a fit person to carry it into execution, he hopes His Majesty will allow him, by degrees and upon proper occasions, to submit the changes which shall appear necessary at the time. But if the plan he has proposed shall not appear advisable, or if a better shall be suggested by the King's servants which His Majesty may wish to be managed by abler hands, it is his earnest desire, as soon as H.M.'s affairs will permit, to return into the Royal presence and lay this government at his feet, with as much satisfaction as he did at first receive so very distinguished a mark of His Majesty's favour, his utmost wishes being to do that which may contribute most to the ease, the honour, and the safety of the Government.—Dublin Castle. 909. LORD GRAY to LORD WEYMOUTH.

The church of Nigg, near Aberdeen, is vacant, and is in the gift of the Crown, but the magistrates of that town are proprietors of half the parish. Application is made by them to Lord Strathmore to procure a presentation for one John Cruden. It being doubtful whether Lord Strathmore may not have left London before he received the application, he, Lord Gray, would inform Lord Weymouth of it, that it may not be got out privately for another, as some of late have been procured. — Kinfauns Castle.

The reply, dated 7 June. Lord Strathmore had applied to him, Lord Weymouth, for the church of Nigg, and he only waited for some proper informations in order to comply with his Lordship's request. Asks in what instance livings in Scotland have of late been procured privately, as such information will be of singular use to him in the recommendations he will make to the Crown in future.

P.S. — Is sorry to find that Col. Hopburn, member for the county, has recommended another person, at the request, as he says, of a majority of the heritors. Will be very cautious in laying before the King any one, till he is well informed of the true state of the matter.

Arrived the 11th, and the next day sent the Consul to demand an audience of the Doge, who appointed the following evening (Monday). Having represented the rumour as to the cession of Corsica, and requested an answer, the Doge replied that he could of himself say nothing without consulting the Senate, which he would assemble the next day, and doubted not but a satisfactory answer would be given. Thus far he, the Commodore, proceeded with the advice of Lord Stormont, who was here at this time. On Thursday the Consul was sent for to the Secretary of the Senate, who gave him a very vague and evasive reply to what he, the Commodore, had asked;—which by no means corresponding to what the Doge had promised, he went himself to the Secretary, who said he was directed by the Senate to say that since 1763 the Republic had applied to almost all the powers of Europe for assistance against the rebels of Corsica, and particularly to England, but that no attention had been paid to them by any nation except France, with whom they had entered into a treaty to send troops to that Island to their support, and that it was in consequence of that treaty the French were now sending troops there. Replied, that since his arrival he had seen three galleys with a number of vessels come from Corsica with Genoese troops, and that it was certain they had totally evacuated the Island, and given the entire possession to the French; and as this was a step greatly prejudicial to the King his master, he thought it his duty to demand an answer whether it was so or not. The Secretary then said he would acquaint the Doge of what had passed; to which he consented, and the conversation ended. Will transmit results in his next. When the Secretary of State delivered the paper accompanying them, he stated that the Senate had despatched a Minister to London to satisfy His Britannic Majesty that nothing prejudicial to the interest of England was intended by the late treaty respecting Corsica. He, the Commodore, replied, that the Senate surely could not be ignorant that the delivery of Corsica into the hands of the French must be extremely prejudicial to the trade and interest of Great Britain, particularly in a future war with France, as Corsica was to be seen from Toulon, their chief seaport within the Straits, and consequently a few ships stationed in the ports of that Island would now greatly distress, if not put a stop to, our trade in the Mediterranean. To which no answer being returned, he took his leave. The Genoese in general seem to be much dissatisfied with the treaty. 935. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to the EARL OF SHELburnE.

The other, recommending that Ensign James Segrave, of the 65th Regiment, who has been returned absent without leave since 15 February last, having refused to join his corps, though frequent orders have been sent to him for that purpose, may be superseded. But as Mr. Segrave, the father of this young man, is a gentleman of family and character, and purchased this commission for his son, his Excellency requests His Majesty to permit him to dispose of it to Mr. Robert Mostyn. — Dublin Castle. $1\frac{1}{2}$ pp.

936. RIOTS, &c. connected with MR. WILKES.

A series of letters, &c., that passed between Lord Weymouth's office, the Duke of Northumberland, the Justices of the Peace of the city and liberty of Westminster (represented by Sir John Fielding, Chairman of the General Quarter Sessions), the Justices of the Quarter Sessions of the county of Surrey (whose Chairman was Daniel Ponton, Esq.,) and others. This correspondence relates to the precautionary measures taken against the riotous proceedings apprehended, and which actually occurred, in connexion with the election, arrest, trial, and imprisonment of John Wilkes. It has not been thought necessary to give individual abstracts of the entries, which are most irregularly made as to date; but the following general abstract contains the particulars which have been thought of greatest interest and worthiest of notice.

[The election for the county of Middlesex, when Mr. John Wilkes was returned at the head of the poll, came on, on the 28th March, at Brentford.] It was probably on this occasion that (p. 103) Sir John Fielding had to inform Lord Weymouth that the Sheriff of Middlesex had ordered the High Constable of Westminster, with his peace officers, to attend at Brentford (where he could not help thinking they were out of their jurisdiction,) and that not one constable was left in Westminster. Under these circumstances, he said, it might be right to be provided with military assistance, but that nothing of that sort should appear till necessity called for it, lest it should provoke what it was intended to prevent.

(P. 104.) On the 30th, Sir John Fielding and Mr. Kelynge put into execution a plan (which is detailed) for preserving tranquillity in Westminster, and for securing peace at Lord Bute's house in South Audley Street, without mentioning his name to any of the peace officers. But the latter part of the scheme was so far counteracted, that some of the constables of the county (by whose directions Sir John Fielding did not know) came to Lord Bute's house about ten, thus evidencing their intent to be that of protecting that particular house, which, he was always apprehensive, invited rather than prevented mischief. Sir John Fielding's chief clerk, on going his round, armed with a privy search warrant on the statute of 17 Geo. 2., found every part of Westminster in a state of perfect tranquillity. It was discovered (p. 106) that Mr. Robert Chandler, a tea-broker in the City, headed one mob, and that Matthew Christian, a gentleman of Antigua, leading at St. Paul's, headed another.

[In view of Mr. Wilkes's appearance] at the Court of King's Bench on Wednesday, the 20th April, the magistrates of Westminster held a meeting on the previous Saturday, in order (p. 107) to "prepare everything necessary for the prevention or punishment of any riots" that might happen. By Sir John Fielding's desire (p. 55), he being chairman of the meeting, a letter was written to him by Lord Weymouth (p. 56), reminding him, in connexion with the then recent alarming instances of tumult and riot, how much depended upon the measures he should take upon the occasion, and how much was expected from the vigilance and activity with which they should be carried into execution. His Lordship also informed him that every precaution had been taken to support the dignity of his office, and that the civil magistrate, upon application at the Tower, the Savoy, or the War Office, and also at the Tilt Yard (p. 61), would find a military force ready to march to his assistance. His Lordship also said he had no reason to doubt his caution and discretion in not calling for troops till they were wanted, but hoped there would not be a moment's delay in calling for their aid where there was occasion, that occasion always presenting itself when the civil power was trifled with and insulted, as a military force could never be employed to a more constitutional purpose than in support of the authority and dignity of magistracy. This letter was communicated (p. 55) to the Duke of Northumberland, Lord Weymouth thinking it his duty to apprise his Grace of every precaution taken in order to preserve the public peace. Sir John Fielding reported the magistrates who held their meeting at Guildhall, to have been (p. 107) extremely unanimous on the occasion, and determined to do their duty with spirit and resolution. A method recommended for preserving the public peace on 28 April, signed by two of their number, and dated the 17th, is entered on pp. 108-11.

The magistrates for the same division met again, to the number of 25, for the same purpose, on the 18th April (p. 69), when they resolved that all then present would attend on the 20th by eight o'clock in the morning. They divided themselves into parties, and appointed the place where each party should sit. The places chosen were Guildhall, Westminster; the vestry room of St. Martin's and St. Clement Danes churches respectively; "near Buckingham Gate;" St. James's Coffee House, and Litchfield Street. They also arranged for the attendance of the constables, and each magistrate had a printed proclamation delivered to him (p. 71).

A letter from Lord Weymouth, to the same effect as that written to Sir John Fielding, was also written (p. 57) to Daniel Ponton, Esq., Chairman of the Quarter Sessions at Lambeth, in consequence of which (p. 62) a special meeting was also held on the 18th April by the Justices of Surrey at St. Margaret's Hill, Southwark. They reported that they did not find, upon the fullest inquiry, that any riotous disposition had appeared amongst the common people in their division, nor that any part of the indecent spirit of tumult and disorder which had discovered itself in Westminster had yet spread to Southwark ; but that they had, nevertheless, the necessary preventive measures under their deliberation. Their zeal and expedition were specially commended by Lord Weymouth (p. 64).

The Lord Mayor was also communicated with (p. 65). He replied on the 19th, that Lord Weymouth might rely on his attention to preserve good order in the City ; and that for that end he had ordered every constable to be on duty at the watch-house in their respective wards by 9 o'clock in the morning ; but he flattered himself, as the business of the next day would be in the morning, that nothing offensive would happen, as, from observation, he had found very few daring enough to commit an open breach of the peace in daylight. This "prophesy" was fulfilled (p. 66). The behaviour of the magistrates on the occasion received the commendation of the Duke of Northumberland (p. 67).

Mr. Wilkes's solicitor having informed the Attorney General that he, Mr. Wilkes, would submit to be arrested on the 26th April (p. 73) by suffering himself to be served with the Capias (p. 72), the fact was communicated on the 25th privately and confidentially to the Duke of Northumberland (p. 71), Sir John Fielding (p. 73), and John Pownall, Esq. (p. 67), that preparations might be made for whatever might happen ; for it was much to be apprehended (p. 68), if the court should send him to the King's Bench Prison, that riots might ensue, and attempts be made to rescue him ; for the mob went to the King's Bench Prison on the night of the day when Wilkes appeared at Westminster, and alarmed the keeper, who gave them beer to keep them in good humour (p. 68).

The information was trusted to Mr. Pownall (p. 68), rather than put in Lord Weymouth's letter to the Justices, and left to his judgment to make such use of as he should think most proper. On the morning of the 26th, the magistrates and peace officers of Westminster met at Guildhall (p. 111). The meeting was numerous, unanimous, and spirited. They sat with the outward door shut (p. 112) ; and resolved that no magistrate then present should absent himself without leave of the body, and that two of them at a time should go out to reconnoitre the state of Westminster Hall and parts adjacent, and make their report to their colleagues at Guildhall. This was done every half hour from ten o'clock till two, when, everything being quiet, they adjourned (p. 113).

It was at first intended (p. 75) that Mr. Robert Wood, Lord Weymouth's secretary, should wait on the Attorney General on the evening of the 26th, in order to fix upon measures for the arrest of Wilkes, which had been "so shamefully neglected by the "Sheriff's officers." But Mr. Nuttall, [Solicitor to the Treasury,] seeming confident of having him soon in custody, Mr. Wood wrote to Mr. Francis the same day to inform him that Lord Weymouth concluded that it would be unnecessary for his office "to attend "further to the execution of this service," and that it would imply a diffidence in those whose immediate duty it was to attend to this matter, if he, Mr. Wood, were sent on such an errand.

This correspondence does not show exactly when Mr. Wilkes was arrested,* but on the 28th (p. 114) Sir John Fielding wrote to Mr. Wood, saying that the instant he received Lord Weymouth's letter he got together at Guildhall as many magistrates and peace officers as the shortness of the notice would admit of. They continued there, constantly reconnoitring the neighbourhood, till the whole was ended, and there was not the least appearance of mob or apprehension of disturbance; and if Mr. Wilkes had been called into court before they had given judgment in the case of the physicians, which took up a great deal of time, he might have gone to prison with the utmost secrecy. The moment the commitment of Mr. Wilkes appeared the least probable, Sir John Fielding sent an express to the magistrates on the Surrey side to acquaint them with it, and to desire them to be prepared. Everything being then quiet, as soon as the court broke up, Mr. Wilkes was put into a coach, attended by the Marshal of the King's Bench and the Chief Justice's tipstaff. The magistrates and peace officers still waiting at Guildhall, Mr. Welch, one of the justices, attended the coach to the Surrey side of Westminster Bridge, and then returned to Guildhall; but before he got there on a sudden a number of persons took off the horses, turned the coach round, and, with an expedition beyond conception, drew the coach through the Strand, and through Temple Bar, and into the City, so that stopping it was impracticable; and nothing could well have prevented the accident, unless the constables had been upon the bridge to receive him. Sir John Fielding, Mr. Kelynge, and Sir John's clerk got into a coach, and pursued to Temple Bar, but found the streets perfectly quiet, without the least bustle or noise. Then Sir John Fielding despatched the High Constable, his clerk (Mr. Marsden), and other persons, to pursue Mr. Wilkes's coach, in order to be useful where they could by giving notice, and to wait the event. They did not return till near one o'clock, when Mr. Marsden reported that the mob had drawn Mr. Wilkes's coach to Spital Square, and afterwards to the Three Tuns Tavern by Spital Fields Church, where Mr. Wilkes remained some time, but he was in the King's Bench Prison before eleven o'clock.

On the evening of the 28th (p. 116) there was a riotous assembly before the King's Bench Prison, when the military were called out, and dispersed the mob before the prison; but the mob gathered again in the High Street, and committed some acts of violence, and compelled the inhabitants to illuminate their houses. This lasted till about two in the morning, when, the streets being quiet, the magistrates departed, leaving a serjeant's guard. Similar occurrences took place the next night, the mob beginning to pull down the fences before the prison. Mr. Ponton, with other magistrates and the constables, destroyed the intended bonfire; but the prison not being thought safe, military aid was again sent for, but the constables had dispersed the mob into the High Street before their arrival. At twelve at night all things were again quiet.

*April 27th. "This morning Mr. Wilkes's attorney acquainted the Attorney General that Mr. Wilkes was in custody by a writ of Capias ulagatum, &c."—Annual Register vol. 11, p. 99.

On Saturday [the 30th] the magistrates again attended with the peace officers (p. 118). A large crowd of people continued about the King's Bench Prison, but no riot nor outrage was offered, and about nine o'clock all were peaceably dispersed. The next day (Sunday) the magistrates did not attend personally, but appointed proper persons to observe the behaviour of the people, and the day ended without any outrage being attempted. The next two days the magistrates again met, and agreed to meet frequently while the people continued to assemble.

On the 6th of May a guard of 100 men was ordered to do duty at the prison in such manner as General Harvey should direct (p. 76). The same day the magistrates of Surrey received, through Mr. Ponton, a commendation from Lord Weymouth for their vigilance and zeal (p. 77), and an intimation that proper attention would be paid to their just demands for expenses incurred by extraordinary attendance. On the 9th it was reported (p. 78) that the disorderly assemblies of loose and dangerous bodies of people round the prison rather increased than abated, and it was requested that a respectable body of soldiers might do constant duty there, as the Marshal represented it to be in the utmost danger. At the same time the insurrection of the seamen was submitted to the high department of Government, as it was impossible, from its magnitude and the situation in which the mischief and violence operated, for the civil power to deal with it, though (p. 120) the inclinations of the magistrates were to serve effectually, and not to alarm the high departments of Government.

It was feared that there might be a great concourse of people at the opening of Parliament on the 10th (p. 81), and the magistrates were therefore desired to attend with as great a number of constables as could be collected. But before this intimation was received (p. 82) Sir John Fielding had given notice to the magistrates of Westminster, and they accordingly met at Guildhall at 11 o'clock (p. 83), thirteen justices being present. Another justice attended at Bow Street. Their resolutions are entered on pp. 83-4. Two of their number attended at the Tilt Yard Coffee House, and four at the doors of the House of Lords and House of Commons, with the peace officers. A troop of horse, and afterwards a hundred men, were sent over to support the civil magistrates at the King's Bench in Surrey, a man having been killed there. The reports of the different magistrates were that everything was free from outrage, the passages to neither House obstructed, but that it was difficult to prevent the "hollowing" of the common people in Palace Yard. Their zeal and attention received the approval of Lord Weymouth (p. 85), who earnestly recommended them to continue without further notice the same prudent and active measures, and to be particularly watchful to preserve the peace about the House of Commons the next day.

The night before (p. 86), there had been a riot at the King's Bench Prison, when the magistrates, endeavouring to read the proclamation and seize some of the rioters, were obliged to retire into the Marshal's house for shelter. The Guards were ordered out; and, finally, about eleven, the mob in a great measure dispersed, threatening, however, to return the next day. To meet this threat, and to preserve the peace, the magistrates were assembled in Southwark before ten-o'clock in the morning. They feared it would be necessary to make a requisition of further military aid (p. 87). The prudent conduct and genteel behaviour of Col. Wright, who was the commanding officer the night before, received their acknowledgments.

The 11th of May brought the magistrates together again at Guildhall, to the number of ten. A number of coalheavers appearing at Guildhall, carrying a flag and drum, two magistrates, Sir John Fielding and Mr. Reid, went out and dispersed them, and got their drum and flag away. On its being reported that a very large body of sailors, with flags flying, were near the Parliament House, Mr. Welsh, Mr. Spinnage, and Mr. Read went out to disperse them. The sailors immediately agreed to put away their flags, stating that they came thither to receive an answer to the petition delivered the previous day to some of the members of Parliament relative to their wages. The state of the King's Bench Prison was reported to be quiet the whole day.

In sending to Mr. Wood an account of the day's proceedings, the complexion of which gave hope that the riotous disposition of the people was sinking into order, Sir John Fielding gave him a hint (p. 90), which he might mention or not as it appeared to him, that if Lord Weymouth in a few days should think proper by a line to express his satisfaction as to the general proceedings of the magistrates, it would not only be useful then, but create a zeal and readiness on a future occasion.

On the 13th, the Surrey magistrates reported (p. 91) that for the two days past the rioters had been less numerous in the daytime, but that in the evening circumstances were different, and tumults and outrages attempted to be committed, which, however, had been restrained by military forces being disposed of in different quarters. The same day they granted a warrant against Capt. Murray for aiding and abetting the soldiers in shooting William Allan, jun.

On the 18th a letter was written by Lord Weymouth to Daniel Ponton, Esq., (p. 99,) stating that his Lordship had received His Majesty's commands to thank him for the continuation of his vigilance and care, and to assure him that nothing could be more agreeable to His Majesty than to see him persevere in the discharge of his duty with a caution and firmness which had already produced the most salutary effects. The next day Mr. Fraser conveyed to Sir John Fielding Lord Weymouth's approval of his punctuality and attention, and a recommendation to him and the rest of the gentlemen in the commission to continue their diligence, and to exert their utmost vigilance and care.

There was no civil magistrate attending with the troops at the King's Bench Prison on the 22nd (p. 101), and this gave the officer in command great uneasiness. Lord Barrington wrote two letters to inform Lord Weymouth of the fact the following day (pp. 126-7), and submitted it to his consideration whether it would not be necessary to remove the detachment of Guards from the Tower on duty there, unless a civil magistrate could be prevailed on to be constantly with them. Mr. Wood wrote to Mr. Thomas, Marshal of the prison, about the matter (p. 101), and he communicated the contents of the letter to Mr. Ponton (p. 126), whereupon that magistrate waited on Lord Weymouth, and satisfied his Lordship as to the vigilance and activity of the magistrates of Surrey under the critical circumstances of affairs. They, however, in order that the officers of the army might have no cause of complaint, immediately resolved to attend, so that one or more of them would be at the King's Bench Prison every day.

On the 24th the magistrates of Westminster assembled at Guildhall (p. 127), and resolved to meet the first Monday in term to be prepared for any disturbances that might arise on Mr. Wilkes's being brought up on the Wednesday to attend the arguing of his case; which resolution they fulfilled (p. 142). Of this Lord Weymouth was informed by Sir John Fielding, through Mr. Wood, who wrote in reply, on Tuesday, the 7th of June (p. 144), that Lord Weymouth highly approved of every instance of the affection and vigilance of the civil magistrates upon these occasions; and as he had not only constantly approved this conduct, but frequently attempted to rouse and stimulate magistracy to an exertion of their duty, giving both praise and blame where he thought it was due, so he thought it right now to apprise Sir John that if the same indecent contempt of the civil power should appear on this occasion that was shown when the magistrates were assembled at the same place, and permitted Mr. Wilkes to be rescued and drawn through the City without any person being taken into custody, he would think it necessary to make strict enquiry, and would expect to have a more satisfactory account given than he had received of that affair. He concluded by observing that if civil magistracy were disgraced when the Secretary of State had so often exhorted them to their duty, and had prepared the military to support them legally as their last resource, it must be their own fault.

A copy of this note was sent to Mr. Ponton (p. 143), in order to show him that Lord Weymouth could distinguish between the conduct of magistrates "on this and the Surrey side of the water," and was ready to do strict justice to both. Mr. Ponton was reminded that his vigilance and activity were the more wanted in proportion to the remissness and supineness of others.

On June the 8th, the day of Mr. Wilkes's trial, as it was apprehended that some attempts might be made to illuminate at night in consequence of the favourable issue of it, Sir John Fielding was desired by Lord Weymouth (p. 146) to request the Secretary-at-War for a patrol, in order to prevent a disgrace similar to that which had happened on a former occasion, unless he was certain that it would be unnecessary. This Sir John declined to do (p. 132), as he had not the least cause to imagine that any illuminations were intended; and a patrol for horse patrolling the streets without peace officers attending all of them would be dangerous, and had lately given rise to some inconveniences ; but the constables had been on duty all day, and he prevailed with the High Constable to go with some peace officers to the watch-houses in the different parishes in order to assist the inhabitants if any such attempts should be made. On this day the magistrates of Westminster met at Guildhall, at eight in the morning (p. 133), and went through the duty of the day with great zeal and alacrity (p. 132) ; but Sir John reported that Mr. Wood's note to him had greatly mortified them, as they deemed their conduct through the whole of the unhappy disturbances quite irreproachable. He wrote that he had very much fear that on a future occasion he would have a difficulty in getting them together, and that he would take an opportunity of speaking to Mr. Wood on the subject, as he was much distressed about it himself ; and, in conclusion, most solemnly declared he had never taken more pains in his life to discharge a public trust than at that time.

The minutes of the resolutions and proceedings of the magistrates this day are entered, pp. 133-6. They acquainted the Court of King's Bench and the Marshal of the Prison that they were in readiness to afford any assistance. They communicated with the Surrey magistrates, who were assembled at the Ordnance Arms, Westminster Bridge. It having become known to them that the Marshal intended to take Mr. Wilkes back to the prison privately by water, a plan was formed of amusing the mob at Westminster Hall door, by directing all the constables to be there, as if waiting for Mr. Wilkes, till he should be landed at Lambeth, and then all to repair to the centre arch of Westminster Bridge, where the Surrey constables were to meet them, in order, in case of any rescue, to prevent his return through Westminster. At three o'clock, notice having been brought that Mr. Wilkes was safely lodged in the King's Bench Prison, they adjourned. At night everything was in a state of perfect tranquillity (p. 137).

The next day Mr. Wood wrote to Sir John Fielding (p. 137), to say that Lord Weymouth was very sorry that anything transmitted by his directions should have given the magistrates any degree of uneasiness. His Lordship was very sensible of the trouble Sir John had been at, and of the diligent attendance of the magistrates at Guildhall on those occasions when their presence was thought necessary ; but at the same time he had thought it his duty to put them in mind of what had happened on a former occasion when they attended there, lest anything of that kind should be repeated, in which case it would have been impossible not to take notice of it in another manner. Mr. Wood further said, that Lord Weymouth had made strict enquiry into the circumstances of Mr. Wilkes's rescue ; and though the information which he had collected from some of the magistrates and others who were eye-witnesses of it was by no means satisfactory, he had not thought it proper to take further notice of it then, knowing the magistrates' intentions to have been good, however unhappy they had been in carrying their preventive measures into execution. If Sir John could justify what then happened, his Lordship would be glad to have reasons for changing his opinion of it. Till then he must continue to think that Mr. Wilkes's rescue was a disgrace to civil government, which called for his animadversion when he had to give instructions on a similar occasion. But he was as happy now in an opportunity of being able to bear favourable testimony to their diligence and activity, as he was mortified when he found it his duty to disapprove.

Sir John Fielding was desired (p. 142) to order the constables to attend at Westminster Hall on the 14th June,* with any magistrate he might think proper. The Westminster magistrates met on this day again at Guildhall, seven being present. Their resolutions are entered, pp. 147-50. The magistrates of Surrey were also ready at the Ordnance Arms, on the Surrey side (p. 148), with peace officers and troops at hand, to execute any plan of conjunction with them for the preservation of the public peace. At one time a message was sent to Mr. Reid, the magistrate who had gone to the Horse Guards to conduct the troops, if necessary, for the Horse to be ready to mount and the Foot ready to march at a moment's warning, a disturbance from the behaviour of the mob being then expected. However, the troops do not appear to have been called for. Mr. Wilkes went at six o'clock by water, and was safely delivered at the prison, when it was resolved to adjourn. A numerous populace assembled at the King's Bench Prison (p. 141), but no riot nor outrage was attempted.

On the 17th (p. 151) Sir John Fielding was informed that Lord Weymouth desired that the constables might be collected at Guildhall, or any place in the neighbourhood of Westminster, on the following day, at half-past eight, but that they might not appear in the Hall, unless the mob made it necessary, or they should be sent for. Sir John replied, that previous to this communication, having received information by Lord Mansfield's tipstaff that Mr. Wilkes was to be brought up,† he had sent a messenger to the magistrates, and precepts to the constables, to be at Guildhall by eight o'clock in the morning. The magistrates accordingly met (p. 152) at the time and place appointed, and took care that both Horse and Foot should be ready at a moment's warning at the Horse Guards to support the civil power; but there was no attempt whatsoever to prevent the execution of public justice. In reporting this, Sir John Fielding wrote that as he hoped it was the last time he should have any occasion of troubling Mr. Wood on Mr. Wilkes's coming to Westminster Hall, he felt himself in duty bound to the magistrates of the city and liberty of Westminster (who had done him the honour to make him their chairman) to assure Mr. Wood that their zeal, attention, and attendance (often to the injury of their private affairs) on the late unhappy disturbances deserved every commendation, and, he flattered himself, had been of infinite service towards preserving the public peace; and that, when leisure would permit, he did not doubt but that he could convince him, Mr. Wood, that the misrepresentation of some facts had thrown blame where praise was due (p. 153). Ten magistrates met on the 18th; their resolutions are entered, p. 154. These resolutions, with Sir John's letter, were communicated to Lord Weymouth, who directed Mr. Wood (p. 155) to convey to Sir John Fielding, and the magistrates who had acted with him, his Lordship's hearty thanks for their assistance, and an assurance that he would not fail to do them ample justice in taking the first opportunity of stating their services to the King in a proper light. For which, being communicated to them in the General Quarter Session assembled on the 30th June, they returned their acknowledgments through Sir John Fielding (p. 159).

* There is a discrepancy between the date of this appearance of Mr. Wilkes at the Court of King's Bench, as given by the Annual Register (vol. 11, p. 125), and as settled by these Papers. The Annual Register places it to June 15th, a day later.

937. MR. R. DINGLEY to the EARL OF HERTFORD.

Dom. Geo. III.,
pet. 80, No. 29.

Recites the substance of a former petition to Lord Shelburne from himself, as treasurer to the Magdalen Home, and Sir John Fielding, as treasurer to the Asylum, stating that Mr. Page, late member for Chichester, having given for the use of the public the receipts left him by Mr. Ward, His Majesty then granted to Jno. White and J. F. D'Osterman, the two chymists employed by Mr. Ward for making the medicines, salaries for life respectively of 300*l.* and 200*l.* a year, on condition of their making the medicines at prices fixed by Mr. Ward, which brought them within the reach of the meanest of H.M.'s subjects. Sir Jno. Fielding and Mr. Dingley were entrusted with the management and direction of the sale of the medicines, the profits being divided between the Asylum and Magdalen Home. D'Osterman having died, his widow continued to supply the medicines. The petition prayed an allowance for life for her at least of 100*l.* per ann., on the same condition as her husband held his. Mr. Dingley says Lord Hertford promised his good offices. The widow is equally capable with her husband, and in indigent circumstances, and will not be able to supply the medicines at the low prices fixed without such allowance.—Lamb Abbey, near Foots Cray. 3 pp.

940. RIOTS AMONG THE SAILORS.

T. Nuthall to Lord Weymouth. Supposes his Lordship will have heard the disagreeable news of a body of sailors rising yesterday and striking the sails of two ships off Shadwell Dock. They were only 40 or 50 in number at first, but after coming ashore from striking the sails, they called at the public-houses, and the number increased to 200, and then with flying colours they marched past the house where the soldiers keep guard. As these proceedings will probably be continued, hopes that at least 50 soldiers will be ordered to be in the barrack, and that the magistrates will be written to to secure the ringleaders, and especially those who carry the flags, &c., and to send them up immediately to Sir John Fielding, for examination, which will not be safely done at that end of the town.

A letter to the Secretary-at-War, ordering the re-inforcement as desired.

Reply from Mr. Wood to Mr. Nuthall. Lord Weymouth is informed that one Ellis, a lawyer of Grays Inn, is drawing up an indictment against the active magistrates, under the direction of Serjeant Glynn, for the trial at Guildford.

Letter written, according to Mr. Nuthall's request, to Mr. Alderman Shakespear, Mr. Pell, and Mr. Scot, and their reply, both dated 5th. They report "all quiet."

Ireland,
v. 434,
No. 10 a, b, c.949. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to the EARL OF SHELBURNE.

Transmits a letter received from the Commissioners of the Revenue, together with an extract from a letter enclosed therein from Henry Hewitt, Commander of the "Thunderbolt" revenue cutter, to be laid before His Majesty, as the intelligence in it is of so much importance not only to the revenue, but also to the trade and commerce and security of Ireland, and the case being such that no steps to prevent the mischief, or its consequences, can be taken in Ireland. This leads him to say that as H.M.'s service does not, at present, require his constant residence in Dublin, he proposes very shortly to visit the southern parts of the kingdom. Is extremely anxious on many accounts to acquire a further knowledge of the military state of Ireland, which, he has reason to believe, is frequently examined and well known to officers of rank in foreign service.—Dublin Castle.

The enclosures. The intelligence refers to a great number of French fishing-vessels which Mr. Hewitt met on his cruise, and which he strictly rummaged, and gave all the trouble to in his power. These vessels, he says, may be of the utmost detriment to the kingdom, as they have the best opportunity of bringing teas and brandy, and taking off wool, beside the ill consequences that may attend on a future war, as they are making themselves complete pilots, and have been and are taking a survey of the coasts, as one of them had on board a most accurate chart, lately printed in France, of all the bays, rivers, and harbours on the coast from the Skellix to Cape Clear. 3½ pp.

In consequence of his letter containing the extract from the examination on oath of Gionⁿⁱ Battista Tassea, a Genoese, charging Signor Dominico Marassi, British Vice-Consul at Genoa, with encouraging him to make use of a Mediterranean pass for a vessel to which it did not belong, Earl Shelburne, by His Majesty's command, directed Mr. Holford, H.M.'s Consul at Genoa, immediately to displace the Vice-Consul for so flagrant an abuse of his office. By a letter received yesterday, Mr. Holford acquaints his Lordship that he has actually taken away the patent of the said Marassi.

The acting Justices of the Peace near Wapping have settled with the Sheriff that the coalheavers are to be executed at Shadwell to-morrow morning, and that they shall call for no military assistance if they can possibly avoid it; but they request, there being now 75 men upon duty at Shadwell, that the same number, or even 50 men, be ordered there at 5 o'clock to-morrow morning under the pretence of relieving the guard, to stay till the executions are over. In Lord Weymouth's absence, can only transmit this account, but will venture to say that whatever order his Lordship may give in consequence of this request, without waiting for a formal signification of the King's pleasure from the Secretary of State, will much oblige Lord Weymouth, who will send the proper letter on his return.—St. James's.

26 July.

Admiralty,
v. 156, No. 38.960. EARL OF SHELBURNE to COMMODORE SPRY.

Has received his letters of the 18th and 22nd June. His Majesty entirely approves of his conduct in requiring of the Doge of Genoa an explanation of the report as to the cession of Corsica to France. The treaty, which is now become public, confirms too fully the suspicions he then had, as well as refutes the pretences used towards him, that this new convention was only a sequel to former treaties with France for the support of the Republic's interest in that Island.

Flatters himself that in case the Emperor of Morocco should have ventured to order out his cruisers to molest the British trade as apprehended, he, the Commodore, will have disposed of the ships under his command so as to protect most effectually H.M.'s subjects, and will send a full account of the state of affairs there, with his sentiments thereupon, after consulting with General Cornwallis. Recommends him at the same time to make use of any opening, not inconsistent with His Majesty's honour, of explaining matters to that Prince, and making him sensible of the unreasonableness, in case the fault he charges should have been really committed by an English vessel, of making such a demand on the nation in general, when it is the constant known practice of all nations to make the punishment of contraband fall on the offenders only by forfeiture of their vessel and cargo. He is also to "observe" the friendship always shown by His Majesty towards the Emperor, especially in the late instance of the Ambassador and the crew of his frigate, and to dwell particularly on the constant intercourse between Gibraltar and his dominions, which it cannot be his Imperial Majesty's interest to break off, in consequence of any new engagements he may have entered into with a power which has for ages been the enemy of his nation, and which, if the particular turn which they seem to have in view could be served by their present temporary friendship, would not fail to become so again. At the same time he is to give a right impression of His Majesty's power to do himself justice, which he would be sorry to exert against an ancient and natural ally. A draft. 4¼ pp.

968. COMMODORE R. SPRY to the EARL OF SHELburnE.

Arrived in Naples the 2nd of last month, and in the evening was presented to the Grand Duke and Duchess of Tuscany by Count Caunitz, the Imperial Ambassador, who had that night made an entertainment for their Royal Highnesses, at which the King and Queen of Naples were also present. The Grand Duke and Duchess having expressed a desire that he would accompany them to their own dominions, whither they were going by sea, he availed himself of the opportunity of obliging them, and proceeded with them to Leghorn, where they landed on the 15th. Part of their escort lost company, and were not seen afterwards; so that, had he not been there, they would have been but slenderly guarded, had they met with the Algerine fleet, which, it was said, was at sea, looking out for them. Their Royal Highnesses warmly expressed their thanks for the attention shown to them, and, as it by no means interfered with the service of the King, hopes it will not be disapproved of. The Grand Duke talked several times to him about the affairs of Corsica, and seemed greatly to disapprove of the proceedings of the French, and to hope sincerely they will not succeed; for, says he, if they get possession of that Island, my port of Leghorn will be ruined. Having no instructions, could only reply that our trade in the Mediterranean would likewise be ruined, and that therefore he hoped we should never suffer the French to possess it quietly.

Has brought away with him three Turkish slaves, who swam on board the "Jersey" at Naples in the night, as no demand was made for them, and it was publicly known they were on board: will send them to their respective countries at the first opportunity.

On his return to this place the 30th of last month, found a Mr. Murray, who said he was charged with affairs of importance from the ministry to General Paoli, and was waiting for a conveyance to Corsica. On the 1st inst. Mr. Murray sailed with Captain Onslow, of the "Aquilon," without giving the least suspicion to the Genoese, who knew of no such person being in the town. Tells all the inquisitive people that the ship is gone to Mahon to refit, being leaky.

The same day received a letter from Capt. Cosby, of H.M.S. "Montreal," dated off Monaco, stating that he had carried a gentleman from this place to Corsica, who was charged with a commission to General Paoli, and that, having executed the business he went upon, he was on his way to land him at Nice; stating also that he had sent to demand an English ship detained at Macinagio by a Corsican corsair. She was found to be a Genoese polacca, with a pass "old, forged, erased, and false." As it is probable the Genoese will represent this affair to the Court of London, has made particular enquiry. Gives the result. In regard to her pass, it was never presented to Mr. Hollford for endorsement, and he is of opinion that the owner must have bought it clandestinely, and named the vessel to correspond with it. Is confident a great many Genoese vessels are navigated with passes no better than this. It is, however, very difficult to get at them, as their general practice is to hoist their own colours in port, and only make use of the English colours and passes at sea. Purposes to proceed to Mahon the moment the wind will permit, calling on his way at Villafranca to forward this letter to the care of Mr. Potter, charged with His Majesty's affairs at Turin, being unwilling to trust it through the Genoese territory.—[H.M.S.] "Jersey," in Genoa Mole. 7 pp.

v. 156, No. 41.974. COMMODORE R. SPRY to the EARL OF SHELBURNE.

Arrived here the 9th, having sailed from Genoa the 5th inst. Details the precautions which he took for the security of Gibraltar and H.M.'s trading subjects, on hearing accounts of the communication between that garrison and the Emperor of Morocco's ports being shut. The moment the "Jersey's" repairs are completed, will proceed to Gibraltar himself. If the wind should prove favourable when he sails from hence, and it be not likely to occasion any great delay, purposes calling at Algier in hopes of prevailing on the Dey to open the ports of Zafarina and Arasgon in the western part of his dominions, for the supply of Gibraltar, which will be of great use in case the Emperor's ports should still be shut, and may induce His Imperial Majesty to take off the additional duty he has lately laid on all refreshments wanted for that place. The "Aquilon" arrived this morning, having performed the service he had her sent on. The pass he mentioned belonging to the vessel taken by the Corsicans he has now in his possession, and will transmit it to the Secretary of the Admiralty, with his remarks thereon; for, notwithstanding it is the most barefaced forgery ever committed, it is backed by Mr. Angel Rutter, who styles himself Consul at Malta. Entry of the enclosure. In order to prevent the contraband trade between the colonies and Hamburgh, some regulation seems necessary about the cockets of ships coming from America and touching in England. At present they are produced to nobody, for want of some proper authority to call for them. Moreover, until the Act of Parliament fixes the time for producing in Europe the certificates of East India goods, calicoes, &c. being landed abroad, the intent of entering into bonds at the Custom House for exporting them will always be evaded.

The Duke of Grafton is of opinion that the present which is made to Mons. Roussel, the Bp. of Liege's Minister, upon his taking leave, should not remain as a precedent for future presents to Ministers of that rank; and though there are reasons for letting Mons. Roussel have 300*l*., his Grace thinks it advisable that only 200*l*. should pass through Mr. Cottrell, the master of the ceremonies, and that 100*l*. should be paid directly by the Treasury. Gives, therefore, by Lord Weymouth's direction, this introduction explaining the reasons of M. Roussel's pretensions to 100*l*.—St. James's.

986. The SAME to the SAME.

Sends a copy of a letter from Gen. Douglas, relative to the embarkation of the 64th and 65th Regiments. Hopes they have sailed this day. As these regiments have objected to every draft above 30 years of age, has the stronger hopes that they will prove perfectly satisfactory. Col. Mackay arrived here last night, and is under great concern that he has not been able to join his corps in time, though he made all possible expedition for that purpose. He has just left to set off express for Cork, where, if the transports have sailed before his arrival, he proposes to hire a vessel, and follow them. Could not but commend his zeal, wishing that he would take care to provide a vessel proper and fit for such a voyage, lest H.M.'s service should lose so good an officer. If he fails of meeting such a vessel at Cork, he will go directly to Falmouth and embark for America.—Dublin Castle.

Finding he was losing time, and that the Dey made objections merely to evade his supplying Gibraltar lest he should give umbrage to the Emperor of Morocco, of whom, since his late defeat by the mountaineers, he seems to be in some fear, and on enquiry learning that the same person who had lately been sent Ambassador from Mequinez to Madrid to conclude the treaty of peace with Spain was then at Algier to bring about a treaty between the Spaniards and that Regency, thought it vain to have any further altercation, so took his leave and sailed that evening. It appears very plain from all those people's behaviour that nothing but fear keeps them our friends; and if ever we should be under the necessity of sending three or four sail of the line to the Mediterranean on any other occasion, their calling at Algier, and discussing those few points which want settling, would have a very good effect, and make them quiet and submissive for some years. For, notwithstanding what has been said about the strength of Algier, the Moors are so sensible of their own weakness that they dread nothing so much as a naval force; and, rather than suffer a single shell to be thrown into the town, they would oblige the Dey to settle matters amicably, or depose him;—of which he, the Commodore, has more than once had hints.

and to set them in a respectable light, proposes for each 100*l.* salary. The Clerk of the Rolls is next to the Governor in the Law Department; and as the nature of this office admits of a distinction, would propose 150*l.* salary. In H.M.'s proclamation these officers are particularly mentioned to be continued in their respective places, with the usual salaries and emoluments, until further signification of His Majesty's pleasure; and each of them had his salary, and also additional offices, to make them more adequate to their characters. The quantum of salary for the water-bailiff is entirely submitted to consideration. This officer has under his charge Royal fish and shipwrecked goods, and holds a court for the recovery of petty debts within the ports. He comes under the department of the Governor, to whom an appeal lies from him in like manner as from the other courts. A salary of 25*l.* to each of the captains of Castletown and Douglas, and 15*l.* to each of the captains of Peel and Ramsey, may be an inducement for reputable men to hold the office. Their salaries formerly were from 20*l.* to 7*l.*; but they were also deputy searchers of the port, and the appointments were thereby made equal to the character. Refers to some minor appointment, such as the turnkey in Castle Rushen (the only gaol in the Isle), which escaped him in a former proposal. As Mr. Castley has presented a memorial to the Board of Treasury to be continued the Governor's chaplain, at his former salary of 25*l.*, it is unnecessary to make any further representation on that head. Upon the contest between my Lord Sandwich and Lord Hardwick at Cambridge, Mr. Castley (who was then a fellow, but is since married), at his, the Governor's, solicitation, and with his permission, went there and gave my Lord Sandwich his vote. Proposes to continue him, knowing it to be agreeable to his Lordship. Submits to consideration the propriety of the Governor's appointing his own domestic chaplain. Enters into details as to the constables. Since the jurisdictions became vested in the Crown, found himself under some difficulty in levying the fines and amercements. But since there was a prospect of the Coroners being paid for their additional duty, has ordered those fines to be estreated and levied by them. They amount to about 25*l.* or 30*l.* a year. They pass under his, the Governor's, examination, and then become matters of record. The perquisites in Chancery (which are part of this fund and regularly paid) have supplied the court-room, public offices, and gaol with coal and candle, as formerly allowed by the Lords Proprietors, and paid for such reparations as were absolutely wanting. But when the funds are collected, a thorough repair will be necessary to keep them wind and water tight this winter. Hopes his and other salaries will be paid from 17 May 1765, like those of the captains of towns and peace officers under them.—Isle Man. 7 pp.

Relative to the meeting of Parliament, now standing prorogued till 31 Oct. Long prorogations being for the ease and benefit of the subject, it has been the constant practice of the kingdom for many years past, in the winter between session and session, to prorogue the Parliament so as to give two entire terms free from privilege. In 1766 it was prorogued from 30 Aug. to 21 April 1767; and if His Majesty's service will admit of the continuance of this gracious mark of his indulgence, which will be very acceptable to the people in general, his Excellency would propose that the Parliament be prorogued from the said 31 Oct. to 20 June 1769. But if the situation of public affairs renders it necessary for Parliament to meet this winter, he must humbly submit the particular day of such meeting to His Majesty's determination.—Dublin Castle. 2 pp.

Relative to the services of Col. Gisborne and Col. Cunningham during the last session of Parliament, particularly upon the Augmentation, that His Majesty may have before him the real importance of their support if this measure be again brought before Parliament this winter. Both took a very active and useful part in the debates; and the former in particular is not only one of the best informed, but also one of the ablest debaters, in this House of Commons. Does not presume to suggest when their presence on any military destination may be spared, but would only lay the circumstances before His Majesty for his consideration in case his service shall again require a renewal of so important and salutary a measure. Ought not to omit doing justice to both these gentlemen in assuring His Majesty "that an exemption from any destination is far from their desire." Had lately occasion during the tour to see Col. Gisborne at Cappoquin, in a severe fit of illness, when he expressed far other sentiments; and Col. Cunningham, upon his regiment being the next in turn for foreign service, has already made a disposition of his affairs to attend the same.—Lexlip. 3 pp.

1012. The SAME to the SAME.

Gen. Dilkes has represented that it would be for the good of H.M.'s service that a greater number of officers should attend on the Dublin duty. By H.M.'s orders, signified through Lord Bristol, the colonel or field officer commanding each regiment and battalion may grant leave of absence to all officers above a certain number. The opportunity which this garrison affords of instructing young officers in their duty, and by a constant exercise and uniformity of discipline creating an emulation between the regiments composing it (to which the General has been extremely attentive), calls upon his Excellency to request His Majesty's permission to restrain the commanding officers of regiments in this garrison from granting leave of absence to officers under their command while they attend on Dublin duty. The extraordinary pains which have been taken of late by ill-designing men to infuse a spirit of discontent among the soldiers against the discipline of the army and the military law, and likewise to render the troops odious to the country, are further motives for wishing that this garrison may be as strong as possible.

Encloses a list of deserters from 1 Jan. 1767 to 30 Sept. 1768. When he first arrived in Ireland, the variety of stoppages made by different corps had occasioned some discontent among the soldiers. Having advised with the Commander-in-chief and Generals then on the staff, who were of opinion that the extent and application of several were improper and unauthorized, he suspended them until he should be better guided by His Majesty's future regulations, which, he believes, prevented many publications, some court-martial, and perhaps something worse. The soldiers can have now no pretence to plead to palliate desertion where past lenity has had so little effect, and in a kingdom where they live so well, and which incurs so much expense and hazard by their crime. For these reasons, hopes His Majesty will not think it an exercise of too great severity if he shall, even in the time of peace, find himself under the painful necessity of ordering one or more notorious offenders to suffer according to the rigour of the law.—Lexlip.

Transmits the proceedings of a General Court-martial held at Kilkenny for the trials of two private soldiers of the names of Mackenzie, in H.M.'s 53rd Regiment, for falsely accusing that regiment of defrauding them of their pay when in garrison in Gibraltar. The prisoners were acquitted by the Court-martial, which, however, found "that during the trial, it having appeared "that whatever deductions were made in the prisoners' pay during "their being soldiers in Gibraltar were in exact conformity to "two several orders given out, the one by General Bland, the "other by Lord Tyrawley, Governors of Gibraltar, the Court are of "opinion that the 53rd Regiment is entirely free from any aspersions "that are or may be thrown on it for having defrauded the soldiers "of their pay." As it did not appear that the deductions made from these two men were authorized by His Majesty under his sign manual, according to the 34th clause of the present Act of Parliament for punishing mutiny and desertion (p. 51), his Excellency desires his Lordship to lay these proceedings before His Majesty for his commands thereupon, this being a matter of great expectation and consequence. 1023. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to LORD VISCOUNT WEYMOUTH.

As it appears extremely advantageous to H.M.'s service that some persons of considerable rank and property should be brought forward, to mark out to the opponents of Government the fixed resolution of the King to distinguish and protect those who have given His Majesty's measures a firm and honourable support, requests his Lordship to recommend to the King Mr. Thomas Dawson, late member for the county of Monaghan, Mr. William Henry Dawson, of the Queen's county, and Mr. Bernard Ward, member for the county of Downe, for the dignity of Barons of Ireland. They are all gentlemen of very considerable property, ancient Protestant families, and of characters and conduct highly respectable. His Excellency had not the least connexion with these gentlemen but what arose from His Majesty's service here, in which they bore a very honourable and distinguished part. The Mr. Dawsons are not of the same family; but should His Majesty disapprove the creation of two gentlemen of the same name at the same time, Mr. Dawson of the Queen's county (who was the last who received hopes of this recommendation) would most cheerfully wait for this mark of Royal favour upon a future day, although he would vacate a seat for a very able friend of Government now out of Parliament. There is one person more whose merits must be laid before the King. In his despatch of 8 Dec. last, his Excellency transmitted memorials from Mr. Sentleger Sentleger and Mr. John St. Leger, in which they both solicited the title of Doneraile. As each of them thought he had the better ground to hope for this mark of Royal favour, he, the Lord Lieutenant, declined making any representation thereupon, but told them that he left it to their conduct during the session to merit this favour of the Crown. Mr. Sentleger Sentleger tried different methods to draw his Excellency into an engagement, and voted at length against the Augmentation. He was closely connected with Lord Shannon. Mr. John St. Leger acted the very reverse, and gave His Majesty's measures a very hearty and useful support. These memorials were laid before the King by Lord Shelburne; and, should His Majesty determine that the pretensions of the former are not superior either by blood or inheritance, his Excellency hopes he will distinguish so honourable a conduct as Mr. John St. Leger's.

Enters thus into particulars that his motives may be known, and the special advantage it will be to H.M.'s affairs at this time to give mankind here this fresh proof that the countenance and support of the Crown is to be obtained by honourable services, and not through the recommendations of such servants who, holding the first offices and emoluments, have accustomed themselves to expect that they are to extend their respective followings, whilst they distress and defeat its most salutary measures.—Leixlip. "Private." 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ pp.

1030. COMMODORE R. SPRY to the EARL OF SHELBURNE.

Admiralty,
v. 156,
No. 44 a, b, c.

Acknowledges letter of 26 July. Immediately wrote to the Emperor of Morocco such a letter as he imagined most likely to succeed, and bring him back to a sense of his own interests, which is the first and principal object considered in the court of Morocco. This, after being shown to and approved by General Cornwallis, was sent by the Vice-Consul of Salée. Knows not what the event will be, but the Emperor cannot help explaining himself one way or other, which is preferable to the present uncertain state. The enclosures are copies of the letter to the Emperor, and one to his Minister for European affairs. They will stand highly in need of his Lordship's utmost indulgence, but he hopes it will be considered that he has been bred a seamen, and little used to a correspondence without the limits of his own profession. He has, however, endeavoured to adapt his style to the temper of the man, and the present circumstances of affairs in that country, and is inclined to think things will be restored to their former footing; but if not, he will be answerable that little damage shall be done to H.M.'s trading subjects, if provided with two or three good sailing frigates in addition to his present squadron, at the same time drawing whatever cattle and provisions shall be wanted for the support of Gibraltar from the Emperor's dominions, without paying any duty for them, as well as harassing and keeping his whole coast in constant alarm.—“Jersey,” Gibraltar Bay.

The enclosures, addressed respectively to the Emperor and Mr. Samuel Sumbel, Mequinez. The shutting up of the communication between Gibraltar and the Emperor's dominions, arose from an additional duty of 25 per cent. laid on exports to Gibraltar, in contravention of the treaty concluded two years before. The Commodore represents what an ill return it was for the treatment of the Morocco Ambassador in England, when he was not only received with the highest distinction, but the ship which carried him over was, by His Britannic Majesty's order, perfectly repaired and made as good as new, and fitted out and supplied in the most complete manner with all kinds of stores, provisions, ammunition, and rigging to the amount at least of 30,000 “pesas duros.” What must the King think when told that one of his ships of war coming to Tetuan has been refused to purchase a single bullock, sheep, or fowl for the relief of her company, by the express order of his Imperial Majesty, in violation of treaties, and in breach of that ancient and strict friendship which has for so many years subsisted to the mutual benefit of both nations? The Commodore further details what has been done, and what he is willing to do, to prevent contraband. After his Imperial Majesty has considered these things, the Commodore flatters himself that his resentment, which seems chiefly pointed at Gibraltar, will subside, and that his Majesty will not suffer our enemies to gain their ends by persuading him to distress Gibraltar, with the view that it may one day fall into their hands, after which they will no longer court his Majesty's friendship, nor want his assistance. But this is a vain and idle surmise; for not all the Powers in the Mediterranean combined will be able to wrest it from the King his master, while His Majesty's fleets command the sea. Intimates also that the latter has other friends, who daily supply the garrison, which now feels as little want as when his Imperial Majesty's ports were open.

The Commodore tells Mr. Sumbel, in confidence, that the 25 per cent. duty on cattle, &c., exported to Gibraltar, will never be submitted to, though at the same time His Majesty would be sorry to break with so old an ally as the Emperor; and also the secret that, if driven to the necessity, he would get whatever cattle he pleased out of the Emperor's country without paying any duty at all. But this he will never attempt until compelled to do so. 15½ pp.

1036. The SAME to the CHAIRMAN and DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.

On the subject of those papers which they put into his hands relative to the very unjustifiable behaviour of the Dutch towards the Company's servants in India, and to the taking possession of the Island of Balambangan.

As to the first, His Majesty gave directions to have it immediately represented to the Dutch Ministers through his Ambassador at the Hague. Sends a copy of the memorial which his Excellency laid before the States General on that occasion.

As to the taking possession of the Island of Balambangan, His Majesty highly approved the Company's attention to the extension of their trade, and expressed his readiness to promote every commercial object which shall appear advantageous to their interests by a continuation of his protection. As the plan is not sufficiently open for H.M.'s servants to form a just judgment on its utility, so His Majesty trusts entirely to the Company's knowledge of their own affairs for what it may produce in a commercial view. But, considering it in a political light, His Majesty is extremely surprised to find the East India Company desire his protection to a measure upon which he has never been consulted, and to hear, for the first time, that they have ordered their servants to take possession of an Island without the least information of any other right upon which that measure is founded, except that of utility, nor any account by which His Majesty might judge whether it can interfere with the subsisting treaties with other States, or give umbrage to those Powers with which he is upon terms of amity. If, therefore, they are apprehensive that any objections may be made by any European Power to this measure, or that it can be considered as an infringement of the rights of any Power in India, it will be highly proper for them to transmit without delay the orders they have given upon this occasion, with such descriptions of the Island, and such informations relative to it, as induced them to take possession of it, with the dates of all papers, &c., in order that His Majesty may judge whether it will be proper for him to grant the Company his protection and support on this occasion.

1041. COMMODORE R. SPRY to LORD VISCOUNT WEYMOUTH.

Alludes to his letter of the 12th inst., enclosing those he wrote to the Emperor of Morocco and his principal minister, since disgraced. ["Not yet received"—marginal note.] The day before yesterday the messenger arrived from Morocco with the enclosed letter from the Emperor (wherewith he sends an English translation done here). As General Cornwallis and he are of opinion that it is not in their power to comply with his Imperial Majesty's extraordinary demands, hopes to receive orders for his future proceedings. As for cattle, has not the least doubt he could procure whatever might be wanted from the Emperor's rebellious subjects on the coast of Reef, which lies between Tetuan and Cape Tres Forcas, should such a step be thought necessary. Waiting further orders, will put to sea to protect our trade and watch the motions of the Emperor's cruisers, should he send any to sea, though apparently he has not the least intention of committing hostilities. Will also go off Faro, and attempt to get a temporary supply of fresh provisions from the Portuguese, returning to Gibraltar by the time an answer to this letter may be expected.

Congratulates his Lordship on his removal to the Southern Department.—Gibraltar Bay.

The Emperor's letter in Arabic, and the translation. He says:— I think nothing of the additional duties laid on provisions, and could excuse them without regret, but that the motive for my persisting therein is because the fault proceeds from you; for if the Christian Marajan had not been guilty of contraband there would be no cause for discord between the two nations. * * * Had you sent a great man of your nation, endowed with good sense, to treat with me on the subject, I should in all probability have been satisfied. * * * You are not to flatter yourselves that by writing letters upon letters you will reduce me to more favourable terms than what I have proposed, for letters alone are only toys for children. Men of sense would have sent a great man to my presence on the occasion, with whom I might have canvassed the matter, and settled it to mutual satisfaction. This still may be done if you judge it proper. * * * If your Consul was good for anything, he might have taken upon himself to settle the matter in the bud, before it blew to such great length; but, poor simple man that he is, he's fit for nothing but to amass the salary that he receives from the King, to serve his own family purposes, without regard to his master's service. I must tell you that you have been the first promoters of the grievance in question, for you were piqued at my demand of the nine thousand mexicos, and in consequence thereof you hastily sent one of your frigates to the ports of Tetuan, Tangier, and Larache, with orders to the trading vessels not to load any goods if the additional duties were laid on them; and further, that if any vessels were already loaded with goods that had paid the additional duties, they were to unload them, and come away empty. Men of sense would not have acted thus rashly; for had you not been too precipitate in sending those orders to the trading vessels, I might possibly have countermanded my order respecting the additional duty. I deny that I gave orders against the ships of war taking their stock of provisions duty free, * * * it was you that would not allow them to take provisions from my ports, though exempted from all kinds of duties.

The account of my having stopped the communication with your garrison is now spread all over Europe; wherefore, were I to send for your vessels and suffer them to load agreeable to the former rule or standard, what would the world think? Why, all Kings would say that I could not live without you; that the want of those duties I was used to receive for the provisions and goods taken away by your vessels lessened my revenues; and that I had no princely honour in me, but that I would sacrifice my honour and dignity for the lure of a little money. This circumstance would highly offend me; don't you think it would? I have now to propose three things for accommodating the differences: that you give your note for payment of the nine thousand mexicos; that you conform to the additional duties; or deliver up the Christian Marajan who committed the contraband. You have your choice of either of the above articles, * * * * What I have said are the words of a high and powerful Prince who is not to be trifled with. 10 pp. and a large sheet.

This letter from the Bacha is to the same purport with that of the "Sheriff" of Mecca, which Mr. Murray transmitted last year; but as it is of a later date Mr. Murray says the same reasons and promises which the Company gave on that occasion will not content the Porte, and that an answer is now necessary. 1056. LORDS OF THE ADMIRALTY to LORD VISCOUNT WEYMOUTH.

Send an extract from a letter from Commodore Spry, Commander-in-chief of H.M.'s ships, &c. in the Mediterranean, dated 16 Nov. last, in Gibraltar Bay, relative to the proceedings of the Emperor of Morocco, and to a truce negotiating between that Court and Spain, together with a copy of one to him from Mr. Consul Fraser at Algiers, on the same occasion.

The enclosures, including one of the 13th Oct., delayed at Cadiz, in which the Commodore states his opinion that his Imperial Majesty has no hostile intention against H.M.'s subjects, but, on the contrary, would be glad of an opportunity to make up the difference. In the second extract he expresses a fear, from the extraordinary delay of the messenger sent to the Emperor, and no account having been heard of him, that his Imperial Majesty was not so amicably disposed as he was inclined to believe. Mr. Fraser's letter gives an account of the visit of a Spanish Vice-Admiral and a squadron to Algier, having on board, for form's sake only, the "Fathers of the Redemption," and with them every captive subject of Algier that was out of the hospitals in Spain, to the number of 1,200. The Dey's avarice led him to bargain for releasing 600 Turks, meaning to receive for the other 300 Spaniards he has in slavery a sum betwixt two and three hundred thousand piasters. But his Catholic Majesty will not agree to a plan of carrying on this slave war upon terms so unequal, and insists all "Musulmen" whatever, that are subjects of Algier, shall be accounted for in the exchange of two to one, whether Turks or Moors. If, from avarice, this squadron is allowed to carry back the Algerine captives, 'tis to be supposed the Dey may apprehend some disagreeable affair. On the other hand, there is to be suspected a circumstance somewhat more material to Great Britain, and of infinite moment to some Northern Powers, because the system of Algier will suffer thereby a very material, if not a total, change,—that is, a truce with Spain for ten years; 'tis without doubt on the carpet. There is money enough on board this squadron.

1066. SIR WILLIAM VIGORS BURDETT, Bart.

Memorial of Sir William Vigers Burdett, Bart., setting forth his ancestor's and his own services, and praying for compensation or suitable employment.

The memorialist relates that "being at the Hague in the year 1747, was offered by persons, who told him they belonged to the most Christian King and Chevalier de S^t George, the command of a regiment to be raised, and a large sum of money, if he, memst, would be aiding and assisting in promoting a rebellion there intended to be raised in this kingdom. That memst gave immediate information thereof to the late Prince of Orange and Princess Royal, who were both pleased to graciously promise and assure memst that they would recommend him to the late King. The said traitor, being arrested, confined, and tried before the Fiscal and Mr. Wolters, the King's Agent, acknowledged mem^{ts} allegations to be true. That memst, being ordered on the first of January 1748 to attend the Prince in his cabinet, his most Serene Highness was pleased to tell memst he was sorry to find that the hopes of those traitors to seduce him to rebellion was founded on his circumstances being embarrassed; also to present unto memst a bag containing one hundred ducats, and to desire memst, if he should not be provided for in England to his satisfaction, to return to the Hague, and that his Highness would. This memst received shortly after orders from the Earl

Admiralty,
vol. 158,
No. 1 a to d. Encloses the letter of Mr. Wilkie, who was charged with the affairs of H.M.'s consulate at Tripoli till he was superseded by Mr. Barker. It contains a very faithful account of his situation. Entreats his Lordship to take into consideration the peculiar hardships Mr. Wilkie labours under in being left without employ with a family dependent on him, after the assurances he received from Commodore Harrison that he would be continued in the consulate during his good behaviour, which was the occasion of his leaving Mahon, where he had been established as a merchant for a long time, with a good prospect and fair character. During the two years and more he has been employed, there has been no complaint of him; and the Bey, in a letter just received, expresses himself highly satisfied with his conduct.
Mr. Wilkie's letter to Commodore Spry, his memorial to Lord Weymouth, and an Italian translation of the Bey's letter. Mr. Wilkie states that he had done the duty of the consulate for the whole time, paying the customary presents (amounting to 250*l.* a year), and defrayed every other expense, without receiving a shilling from the public, or the preceding or succeeding consuls. 11 pp. or parts of pp.

Directs them to take these papers into their consideration, and, according to their opinion, either inform the owners of the "Margaret and Peggy," of Plymouth, that their complaints are unfounded, or report to his Lordship, in order that the further proper steps may be taken.

Dom. Entry Bk., v. 25, p. 190.
Sends copies of two letters from Mr. Lyttelton, H.M.'s Minister at the Court of Portugal, showing that he has reason to suspect that Lieut. Maine, to whom they relate, was returning to England in order to engage persons versed in the art of mining to go over to Portugal to work a mine lately discovered there. It has been found out that immediately on his arrival in England, on Dec. 17 last, he set out for the west of England, from whence he was to embark in return to Portugal. Asks that these letters may be laid before the Lords of the Treasury in order that proper orders may be given to the Revenue officers to be particularly watchful to prevent artificers leaving the kingdom.

No. 67 a to d.

1116. JOHN WOOD, Governor of the Isle of Man, to LORD——.

The Keys of the Isle have been assembled in consequence of their application. They addressed him to transmit the enclosed petition to the King with his warmest recommendations. The principal gentlemen and merchants also had a meeting in order to concert some scheme for the repeal of certain restrictive clauses in the late Acts of Parliament relative to this Island, and for opening a commerce which may afford employment to the inhabitants, and bring a revenue to the Crown. They have prepared a memorial to be laid before the Lords of the Treasury. Encloses the articles of their request, and a copy of their reasons.

Must, in justice to the people, represent them as most loyally attached to His Majesty's person and government, both in Church and State; and though a very few (he believes not one in a thousand), for want of other employment, may have continued the illicit trade, yet it is contrary to the general sense of the people; and, upon proper encouragement, it is hoped, will be entirely at an end. Unless this or a similar plan be adopted, is afraid the revenue of the Island will never answer the intention of Government, and the state of the people will become truly deplorable.—Isle Mann. "No. 1."

The enclosures. The petition of the Keys represents the distresses brought upon the Island by the restraining laws, stating, among other things, that the rents in the trading towns had fallen above 15,000*l.* a year, and that, as a further addition to their distresses, "so as to extinguish totally all circulating cash," the regiment of infantry and two troops of cavalry had been replaced, and their numbers reduced to four companies only. The "scheme" of the merchants is divided under the three heads of Foreign Trade, Interior Commerce, and Fisheries and Manufactures. They ask that the Island should be put on the same footing as Ireland. The "reasons" in support of the scheme is a closely written M.S. of 8 pp. 15 pp. or parts of pp.

1120. LORD WEYMOUTH to the LORDS OF THE ADMIRALTY.

Several despatches from Lieut. Genl. Cornwallis, Governor of Gibraltar, and Commodore Spry, Commander-in-chief of H.M.'s ships and vessels in the Mediterranean, relative to a dispute between the Emperor of Morocco and the Governor of Gibraltar. The Emperor demands that a person whom he accuses of carrying on a contraband trade with his subjects should be delivered up to him, or that the Governor should pay 9,000 Mexican dollars compensation, or agree to certain additional duties laid upon provisions exported from the Emperor's dominions for the use of the garrison. These despatches have been laid before such of H.M.'s servants as are consulted upon his most secret affairs, who unanimously resolved to advise the King to send out two or three good sailing frigates to reinforce Commodore Spry. It is therefore His Majesty's pleasure that their Lordships should fit out and hold in readiness two, three, or more such frigates or sloops, and that they should suggest such measures as they shall judge best calculated to protect our trade, annoy the Emperor if necessary, and supply the garrison with provisions. Asks them also to give as soon as possible a general idea of their sentiments on this head.—St. James's, 27 Jan. A draft, marked "Secret."

which were laid before His Majesty's servants. These letters will be found described in the portion of this Calendar containing Papers of 1768. The "state" concludes by saying that the conduct of Governor Cornwallis and Commodore Spry had been approved, and that attention to the protection of trade, &c. in those parts had been recommended, but no orders given in case things should come to extremities. This single Barbary state had cost 100,000*l.* within the last twelve years. The remedy against the insolent exactions of the Emperor had always been acknowledged easy, but had always been postponed, and the temporizing, expensive, and disgraceful plan of embassies and presents submitted to. "Q. what is to be done now?"

The reply of the Lords of the Admiralty, dated Feb. 21. They had given orders for fitting out two frigates of 32 guns, and two sloops of 14 guns each for this service. They thought that the stationing of frigates, &c. on the coast of Barbary was the best method of protecting the trade, and that the supplying of Gibraltar with provisions must be left to the Commander-in-chief. 15 pp. and parts of pp.

1124. THREAT TO BURN THE CITY OF LONDON.

Papers relating to some information of a public declaration having been made in Dunkirk, that the city of London would be set on fire in four places before the month of April. A note containing the information, addressed to Mr. Wilkes, was enclosed in a letter from a Mr. Thos. Green at Dunkirk to a son in London. Mr. Wilkes referred the matter to the Lord Mayor as magistrate, who then communicated with the Duke of Grafton by mistake,

1125. COMMODORE R. SPRY TO LORD VISCOUNT WEYMOUTH.

Encloses copies of two letters from Mr. Popham, H.M.'s Consul at Tetuan, together with a circular letter from the Emperor to the Christian Consuls in his dominions, and their reply thereto, in order that his Lordship may see the absurdity of that Prince. After Mr. Popham was released from his confinement, he came immediately to Gibraltar. Has written to the Emperor in the strongest terms, complaining of the indignity offered to the King in the person of his Consul. Knows not what effect this may have; but General Cornwallis is of opinion with him, that, until satisfaction is made for so flagrant a violation of treaties, the Consul ought not to return into that country. Submits this to his Lordship's consideration, and entreats him to send orders for his future proceedings as soon as possible. It appears very plain, by all his Imperial Majesty's letters and proceedings, that he wants a person from England to be sent to him with a present, which, doubtless, would reconcile all differences for some time, but it is certain no reliance can be placed on so capricious and avaricious a Prince. Begs his Lordship's pardon for giving his opinion so freely, which he would not presume to do, did he not hope that it will be imputed to his zeal for the honour and service of his Royal master. Has transmitted to the Lords of the Admiralty a full and satisfactory answer to the complaint of the Spanish Ambassador (which he did not receive till the 22nd of last month) of illicit practices committed by H.M.'s ships under his command, in the ports of Spain, and on their coasts. Purposes, as soon as he can do so with safety, to put to sea to cruise on the western coasts of the Emperor's dominions, in order to protect the trade of the King's subjects.—"Jersey," in Gibraltar Mole.

The enclosures. Consul Popham's first letter, dated the 29th January, gives an account of the three men saved at Mamora, and the crew of the "Earl of Sandwich" being given up by the Emperor. The next, dated 16 Feb., of his having been thrown into prison on his refusal to pay a penalty of 1,000 Mexicos, on account of some Moors having landed in Barbary, against the consent of the patron of the vessel in which they had come from Gibraltar (where they had been 30 days in quarantine). The Emperor demanded that the patron should be sent to him, but he was not in Tetuan, and the Consul refused to pay the penalty. When the patron arrived from Gibraltar, he was secured by two soldiers on his entering the gates of the city (Tetuan), and carried to the Governor, who then released Mr. Popham. The circular letter is in French, and signed "S. Sumbel," and relates to a fine to be assessed on all vessels coming to the ports of the Emperor with passengers from the Levant, where the plague was raging. 13 pp.

1130. LORD JUSTICE CLERK (MILLER) to the EARL OF ROCHFORD.

Last night, upon the arrival of an express from London with the judgment of the House of Lords in the appeal between Mr. Douglas and Duke Hamilton, a mob assembled, "proclaimed 1769.

Douglas for ever," and called for a general illumination, which was accordingly complied with by most of the inhabitants. They early discovered a high resentment against the judges who had given their opinion against Mr. Douglas when the cause was decided in the Court of Session, and, as soon as their numbers were sufficiently large, went to my Lord President's house, broke most of his windows, and endeavoured to beat open his door, to the very great alarm of his family. His, the writer's, own house soon after suffered the same fate, as did those of some of the other judges who were of the same opinion in that cause. An attempt was made to break into Duke Hamilton's lodgings in Holyrood House, but was prevented by the guard. The rest of the night was spent in breaking the windows of those who were connected with Duke Hamilton, or who had not illuminated. This morning the spirit of the mob was not allayed. They insulted my Lord President on his coming to the Court, and threatened to pull him out of his chair, and were preparing for a second riot this night. States what measures he has taken for preserving the public peace. —Edinburgh, "8 at night." 2½ pp.

1131. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to LORD VISCOUNT WEYMOUTH.

Relative to the two private soldiers of the name of Mackenzie, of the 53rd Regiment, who were discharged from confinement in consequence of his Lordship's letter of 10 Dec. Being called on next morning to join their companies at roll-calling, they refused in an insolent manner, and persisting therein were again made prisoners. In consequence, he, the Lord Lieutenant, signed a warrant for a general court-martial for their trial for disobedience of orders and insolent behaviour to their commanding officers, which met at Kilkenny on the 15th past, and after several adjournments found them guilty, and sentenced the first prisoner to a thousand lashes and to be drummed out of the regiment, and the second to six hundred lashes.

There is a great probability that these men have been privately advised and supported by some persons in this country, one of whom is a member of Parliament, and that, whatever may be the determination upon these sentences, the matter may not rest there, but that, either in the courts of law or in some other place, the validity of the regulations at Gibraltar, which appear to be the original foundation of all these proceedings, will be brought into question,—James Mackenzie, the first prisoner, having early informed his Excellency, in a letter, that he had friends who would bring the affair before the British Parliament. And as, in canvassing all military points, the utmost industry is used to throw reflections upon the conduct of Government, to kindle a flame against officers, and to render odious the good discipline and service of the army in this kingdom, of which a very disagreeable instance occurred during his (the Lord Lieutenant's) residence in Ireland last winter, he thought he could not be too cautious in a matter in the consequences of which English government may be involved; and therefore, before deciding on these sentences, encloses the said proceedings and sentences of the court-martial, in order to be laid before His Majesty, or otherwise considered. — Dublin Castle. Marked, "Most private."

As to the further proceedings of the mob. After the example of your London mobs, they insisted on a second illumination on Friday night, which, from the terror of what had happened on the preceding night, was generally complied with. 1133. VISCOUNT WEYMOUTH to COMMODORE SPRY.

Informs him of the reinforcement to be sent out to support him, in consequence of the unfortunate dispute for some time subsisting with the Emperor of Morocco, on account of a supposed contraband trade between Gibraltar and his coast. Communicates the opinions of the Lords of the Admiralty as to the best method of protecting the trade, &c. Without confining him to any precise method of proceeding, transmits the following observations and instructions as the general rule of his conduct. A rupture with the Emperor is to be avoided, if possible, the great object of the reinforcement being to give weight to the firm language it may be necessary to hold in order to restore the good humour which too much condescension may not obtain. Recommends to him, therefore, the utmost temper and calmness in all his proceedings, to make the strictest inquiry into the complaints, and to give the Emperor the most perfect satisfaction, by bringing the offenders to justice, if discovered, or, if not, by laying such a state of the unsuccessful inquiries before the Emperor, as ought to convince him that every possible step has been taken in order to give him satisfaction. It will also be agreeable to His Majesty to know the particular steps which have been taken in order to get at the bottom of this supposed contraband, as there is a vague report here that something of this kind has been carried on, to the Emperor's prejudice. The handsome manner in which the Emperor has given up the three subjects saved at Mamora out of the Mahonese vessel, and the crew of the "Earl of Sandwich" lost near Ceuta, consisting of ten men, will give the opportunity of returning such thanks and making such compliments as may pave the way for an amicable accommodation of the disputes. This late complaisance, however, shown at so unexpected a time, and so very unlike his behaviour upon some other occasions, looks a little suspicious, and may be owing to his present attempt upon Mazagan. Notwithstanding, he, the Commodore, is to acknowledge His Majesty's sense of this act of friendship in proper terms, and to give it all the merit which it appears to deserve. If this have not the proper effect, he is to apprise the Consul and any of His Majesty's subjects in the Morocco dominions that it would be prudent to retire, and to give the best notice in his power to all concerned in trade of the danger of a rupture; then to let the Emperor know that His Majesty must consider his very unfriendly conduct as intended to break off all correspondence between the garrison and his dominions, and demand a categorical answer on that head. Should this not produce an immediate satisfactory answer, he will then carry into execution the necessary vigorous measures, and exert all the force under his command in annoying and distressing the enemy in every shape that is practicable.

Had so far signified His Majesty's commands when his letter of 26 Jan. to Mr. Stephens, of the Admiralty, was communicated to his Lordship. Recites the contents. As also a letter from Mr. Consul Fraser, dated Algier, 5 Feb., in which he says, "The Dey has kept his promise of letting supplies be drawn from the western territory for Gibraltar, which will make the Emperor of Morocco more observant of treaties, and that the Emperor of Morocco is treated with great coldness by the Dey of Algiers." Though these accounts give great reason to hope that he will find little difficulty in bringing matters to a proper footing without a rupture, yet it is thought proper that the reinforcement should proceed, and it is left to his discretion and experience whether it may not be advisable to let the Emperor understand the view with which that force was sent out, even though a speedy amicable conclusion of all differences should be come to, as it may have a good effect to show him that His Majesty would rather be at considerable expense to do himself justice than pay a trifle which is unreasonably demanded. As he (the Commodore) is now prepared for peace or war, it only remains to signify the King's pleasure that in whatever way he may find it necessary to proceed he will have it chiefly in view to settle matters upon as clear and stable a footing as the temper of that Prince, and his indifference to engagements which it is his interest to violate, will admit.—St. James's. A draft. "No. 1." 11 pp.

His letter of the 2nd inst. from Gibraltar, and the enclosures therein, have been laid before the King. The account of the Emperor's behaviour to Mr. Popham, and the opinion he (the Commodore) has of that capricious and avaricious Prince, justify the instructions sent in the letter of the 7th inst., No. 1, the duplicate of which his Lordship now sends by the second sloop of war. It becomes needless to add anything to the directions contained in that despatch. His Majesty highly approves his writing to the Emperor upon the indignity offered to the Consul, who is by no means to return till proper satisfaction is made. His Majesty is pleased to find that Prince Masseran's complaints are groundless. The King will be impatient to hear the result of his proceedings, which, whether amicable or hostile, will, it is hoped, terminate in such measures as will relieve the garrison from

The King approves the sentences passed by the court-martial upon the two privates of the 53rd Regiment, named Mackenzie, whose behaviour was unjustifiable in the last degree; but as there is some reason to believe that their disobedience arose from a persuasion that they were no longer subject to military law, and they having lamented their error, acknowledged their crime, and begged for mercy, His Majesty judges it right upon the whole to remit their punishment, as their condemnation will make the law equally known, and prevent all excuse on any future occasion. All possible care is to be taken that an entire approbation of the equity of the court shall be made as public as the remission of the sentences. Asks his Excellency also to enter more extensively into the causes of that dissatisfaction which is shown at exact and orderly military discipline, and to suggest what occurs to him as a remedy. A draft.

To inform him of the obstruction the merchants have met with in their procession to St. James's with their address to His Majesty. It is impossible for him to advance, the rage of the mob being directed against him as chairman, so that, after remaining in his coach till it was broken to pieces, he has been obliged to take refuge here (Nando's Coffee House). Asks, therefore, His Majesty's excuse if he finds it impossible to effect his earnest wish of expressing his loyalty in the manner intended. Besides, being quite covered with dirt, would be ashamed to appear before him in such a condition.—Nando's Coffee House, Temple Bar. 1 p.

Asks for copies of all the regulations sent to Genl. It appears the regulations for fixing the value of the real (in which the troops were paid) were settled by the Lords of the Treasury.

Enclosing a copy of a letter to Lord Plymouth, Lord Lieutenant of the county of Glamorgan, from nine of the principal justices of the peace of that county, giving an account of the inhuman treatment a French ship named the "Concorde," which was driven on the coast, had received from the inhabitants, who have not only plundered the cargo, but also set fire to the ship after having taken everything valuable out of her. Encloses also copies of two papers since received from the French Ambassador, which show that the vessel might easily have been saved, if the inhumanity of these horrid plunderers had not most wickedly prevented it. The whole was transacted in the presence of the magistrates and the Custom-house officers, all of whom did everything in their power to restrain these outrages. An advertisement, offering H.M.'s pardon and 100*l.* reward for the discovery of the offenders, will be published in the Gazette to-morrow. Directs him to exert his utmost endeavours to bring the offenders to justice. 1160. JOHN WOOD, Governor of the Isle of Man, to LORD ROCHFORD.

On receiving his Lordship's letter, No. 1, he lost no time in communicating to the Keys the purport of it, knowing well the general satisfaction it would give, and at the same time signified by letter to Mr. Moore, chairman of the Keys, the advantages he thought might be derived from their giving some public testimony of their acting conformably to the character his Excellency had given of them. This produced a memorial, a copy of which is enclosed.—Isle Mann. "No. 2."

The memorial is addressed to the Governor; signed by 22 Keys, with a note that one member was H.M.'s Ambassador at Constantinople at the time, and that there was a vacancy of one member. They promise on every occasion to join in every salutary measure to discourage and suppress illicit trade; and describe themselves and their countrymen as "unknown to the persons in power but by a traffick which formerly gave them offence and now no longer exists, circumscribed by the narrow limits of an Island, scarce one-third whereof is cultivated, having no branch of commerce open to them, deprived of even supplying a ship on her passage with fresh provisions, unrepresented in Parliament, and having no other avenue to the Royal clemency but thro' his Excellency." They ask him to represent the "distressed situation

1162. LORD WEYMOUTH to the LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND.

His Majesty approves of his reasons for not offering the majority of the 45th Foot to the officers of the regiment. A strong recommendation from Lord Granby, as well as from General Monckton, in favour of Capt. Henry Monckton, deserves particular attention. Had he stated this before, His Majesty would not have demanded a further explanation where the eldest captain has other views, and there is no particular hardship put on other officers of singular merit and of strong pretensions in the regiment.

In reply to his question, it is not His Majesty's pleasure that he should in all cases follow the regimental seniority in service; but in cases where the expediency of affairs in Ireland, or recommendations of the greatest weight from H.M.'s servants in England, offer, he is permitted to lay them before His Majesty.—A draft. 5 pp.

Has received his Lordship's letters, Nos. 1 and 2. Transmits a copy of his letter to the Emperor of Morocco on the confinement of H.M.'s Consul, together with copies of two letters written in bad French, received from Tetuan yesterday, and sent by order of his

Imperial Majesty, as will be seen by that from the Vice-consul which accompanies them. As from the last accounts the Emperor is gone to Morocco, intends to proceed immediately off the port of Mogador, from whence, it being but three days' journey, purposes sending Sir Jacob Wheate, one of his lieutenants, up to that Court, with a letter to the Emperor, and will give him instructions conformable to those just received from home. This will be attended with only a trifling expense, as he will carry nothing with him but a small present, which it will be necessary to make to the Emperor on his introduction. As his Imperial Majesty, by all his letters, seems chiefly to desire that a person of character should be sent to him, is of opinion with General Cornwallis it will bring him to temper and moderation, and be the readiest method of settling matters on a more solid and lasting foundation than they have hitherto been; for, by this means, he will be furnished with a plausible excuse for accommodating those disputes which he has long wished to put an end to, on account of the great deficiencies in his revenues ever since the trade with the Jews of Gibraltar and his subjects at Tetuan and Tangier has been stopped, and will at the same time have the appearance of saving his honour. Should this fail, has no alternative; but will immediately put into execution the latter part of the King's instructions by blocking up H.I.M.'s cruisers in their ports, or destroying them if they put to sea.

General Cornwallis will inform his Lordship of the steps taken to get at the bottom of the supposed contraband. Everything possible has been done by him to discover the offender, and give the Emperor satisfaction.—“Jersey,” in Gibraltar Bay.

Transmits a petition from the governors and guardians of the Hibernian Society for maintaining the orphans and children of soldiers only, praying His Majesty to erect them into a corporation. A subscription for raising a fund to support the establishment of a hospital was first started in 1764. On the first institution of the charity in January 1765, provision was made for the maintenance of 20 boys only; but by the encouragement given by the public, and particularly by the regiments, the Society in the last year have augmented the number to 140. If this application be unsuccessful, hopes for his Lordship's assistance in procuring an Act of Parliament for putting the French, who at present constantly draw large sums out of this kingdom, on the same footing here. 1174. LORDS OF THE ADMIRALTY to LORD VISCOUNT WEYMOUTH.

Send a copy of a letter from Lieut. James Cook, commanding the "Endeavour" bark, in H.M.'s service, dated 30 November last, in the Rio de Janeiro, at Brazil, complaining of ill treatment he received from the Portuguese Viceroy at that place, and of several memorials and other papers relative thereto, enclosed therein.

The enclosures, which contain full particulars. Lieut. Cook's lieutenant was detained on his first going ashore by the Viceroy. An officer attended even Lieut. Cook himself everywhere; but he resisted strongly a sentinel being put with him in his boat, and even stayed on board the "Endeavour" rather than submit to it; and Mr. Banks and the other gentlemen passengers in the "Endeavour" were not allowed to go ashore at all. Lieutenant Hicks refusing to return to the "Endeavour" in a boat in which a guard had been placed, the boat's crew were driven out of her, and carried to prison; a pendant was also taken away from a boat which had drifted. Memorials and letters, copies of which he enclosed, passed between Lieut. Cook and the Viceroy. The latter expressed doubts as to whether the "Endeavour" was a King's ship, and accused the crew of smuggling; the truth of which accusation Lieut. Cook denied. They, however, got a recruit of provisions and water, with many other refreshments; and Lieut. Cook stated that, notwithstanding these embarrassments, they would put to sea without loss of time, in as good a condition for prosecuting the voyage as the day they left England. 45 pp.

Lord Weymouth having heard that the two frigates which were ordered by letter of 27 Jan., and which the Lords of the Admiralty directed to be immediately prepared, are not yet sailed, has directed enquiry into this matter. Asks, therefore, for information, as his Lordship cannot help being uneasy at the delay, if there should be any, in an office of so much importance to His Majesty's service.—St. James's. A draft. 1½ pp.

The reply. Gives an account of the sailing of the "Swan" sloop on the 17th of last month, and the other sloop on the 28th following. The two frigates are ready, and have received their sailing orders, and only wait for a favourable wind. Their Lordships do not conceive that there has been any delay in the equipping these frigates, unless from the difficulty of procuring men, who have entered with reluctance into the King's service, owing, undoubtedly, to the great wages given by the merchants, and to the number of India ships, Greenland ships, and others that have been fitted out for the sea this spring.—Admiralty Office. 2½ pp.

Sailed from Gibraltar the 19th of April, and landed Sir Jacob Wheate, one of his lieutenants, at Mogadore on the 26th, where he was received by the Alcaid or Governor with the highest marks of distinction and friendship, and was not suffered to move from thence till an express had been sent to the Emperor to inform him of his arrival, that he might have an escort (as was pretended) to conduct him to the Court of Morocco. There is an English merchant, named Adams, who has a house at Mogadore, and another at St. Cruz. He has been a long time in that country, well acquainted with its customs and language, and well known to the Emperor. Wrote to ask this gentleman to accompany Sir Jacob Wheate to Morocco, but found he was already at the Emperor's Court. Has now all the reason in the world to hope there will be little or no difficulty in restoring things at least to their former footing, unless some new frenzy should possess the Emperor, of which no man can be absolutely certain. At present, some of the people seem to think he is meditating an attack upon Ceuta, which he may probably be induced to do from his success at Mazagan.

Details the arrangements made for Sir Jacob Wheate's return, and the disposition of the ships under his, the Commodore's, command. Encloses a copy of his last letter to the Emperor by Sir Jacob Wheate, and also the private instructions for the guidance of the latter at Morocco. Gives an account of Spanish ships of war at Cadiz. Encloses a complete list of the Spanish Navy, and where they are stationed at present, by which it will be seen that by far the greatest part of their force is at Ferrol, and most of those are new ships built since the last war. The last post brought orders from Court for several of the captains and lieutenants of their men-of-war stationed here to repair immediately to Ferrol, and reside there. Directs him, therefore, to communicate the report of the person whom his Lordship shall have sent to examine the convicts in Newgate in order that pardons may be made out for such as are fit to serve; and also to send a proper officer to enlist such men for H.M.'s service at Senegal, and then to give proper orders for them to be conducted to the transport at Spithead.

The enclosures. Sir Jacob writes from Mogador, where he was delayed till the arrival of the Emperor’s answer and an escort. In a postscript he informs Commodore Spry of the arrival of Mr. Adams with people to conduct them to Morocco. The latter gives an account of everybody about the person of his Imperial Majesty being perfectly disposed to serve them, which will be a most essential thing in facilitating their business. Mr. Adams says that he is well assured of the Emperor’s regard for our nation at bottom, and his desire of being on a good footing with us; more so since the taking of Mazagan, which has put other plans in his head concerning some of our neighbours, which next spring will bring to light, or Mr. Adams is very much mistaken. Finding, by an express from Court, that the Emperor is out a-hunting for eight days, proposes to join him, as nobody would then interrupt them. 6 pp.

On the 1st inst. an account was brought from Tetuan that an Alcaide had arrived there with the Emperor's orders to open the communication for the supply of this garrison as heretofore. At present there is so much cattle on the hill, occasioned by the supplies lately received from the Dey of Algier's dominions and other places, that General Cornwallis and he have been obliged to order the vessels gone to the Barbary States not to bring any bullocks for a fortnight or three weeks to come; a circumstance that cannot but be of use, as he has been endeavouring all along to persuade the Emperor that the garrison of Gibraltar can subsist without any connection with his dominions. The knowledge of this, and of the reinforcement of the Mediterranean squadron (which he took particular care should come to the Emperor's ears, and did not a little alarm him), will make him more observant of his treaties, as well as convince him that the King will never in future submit to any of his unjustifiable impositions. By the Emperor's answer, a copy of which is enclosed, it will be seen that his Imperial Majesty has made some kind of apology for confining the Consul by returning him double what the messenger exacted of him. Has, therefore, sent Mr. Consul Popham over again to Tetuan, and given assurances, in compliance with the Emperor's expectations, that Marajan (the smuggler who was the cause of the late misunderstanding) shall be banished from Gibraltar for ever. Has at the same time written to Muley Idris (the Emperor's cousin), who was very instrumental in reconciling the differences, to thank his Highness for his friendly offices, and to assure him he would lay before the King the subject of two conversations Sir Jacob Wheate had with him. But this cannot possibly be done by letter in so particular a manner as His Majesty would wish. Has, therefore, charged Sir Jacob Wheate with this despatch, to whom he refers his Lordship.

1224. LORD WEYMOUTH to the LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND.

In reply to his most secret letter, which was communicated by the Duke of Grafton to such of His Majesty's servants as are usually consulted on such occasions. Conveys to his Excellency His Majesty's approbation of the unanimous opinion of his servants that he, the Lord Lieutenant, should have every support in the administration of the affairs in Ireland, and that his own ideas as to that support should be adopted if there is a moral certainty of securing the reasonable views of Government. The picture drawn by him of men and things in Ireland is extremely unpromising, and his sketches of the principal leading characters in that country are drawn with too much coolness and impartiality, and with too genuine an air of truth, to permit them to doubt the correctness of the report. Considered under the separate view in which his Excellency places them, they appear so adverse to Government, and so decided in the part they have taken, that the case seems desperate on his Excellency's side. But when his Excellency afterwards talks in general, though he doesn't positively say he will be able to secure a majority in the first Session, yet he does not despair of it. Upon this more favourable part of the account, is directed to build His Majesty's hopes that he, if supported on this side the water, may be enabled to procure positive and sufficient engagements on his side for carrying through the principal measures of Government next Session; and, in this expectation, His Majesty directs that, instead of the general support on which he collected the sentiments of those with whom he conversed on that head, he be satisfied with an explicit declaration of their way of thinking on two material points. The first is the Money Bill, with regard to which it will be very extraordinary if those who have the honour to serve the Crown should hesitate a moment or show the least difficulty; indeed it would be impossible to consider their silence on this head in any other light than as an undoubted mark of their disinclination to Government, and of a fixed plan to impede every measure which his Excellency shall propose for carrying on the public business. The second is the Augmentation, of which the King sees the real importance and utility in so strong a light that he has its success greatly at heart, and wishes much to see it carried into execution under any modification which will not defeat its purpose. His Majesty relies upon his exertions in promoting and carrying into execution the other measures mentioned when more favourable opportunities may offer. A draft. 4³/₄ pp.

H.M.'s sloop "the Swan" is this morning returned from carrying Mr. Consul Popham over to Tetuan. He was very well received; but upon demanding some provisions for the use of his ship's company, the Collector of the Emperor's duties would not let him have more, free of duties and port charges, than a limited quantity of every article; which Capt. Wilkinson refused, agreeably to the directions he (the Commodore) had given him, on suspicion that such restriction would be attempted, alleging that by the treaties the King's ships were allowed to take on board without limitation any quantities of provisions they wanted, free of all duties. The Governor and Collector pleaded ignorance of any such treaty, and said they would write to Court to know the Emperor's pleasure. Hopes the answer will decide this point in our favour. Thinks it ought not to be given up. Intends to run over to Tetuan with all the ships now with him, and demand a compliance with those articles which he himself concluded with the Emperor's Minister in that very town, as it may possibly be only an imposition of the Governor and Collector. — [H.M.S.] "Jersey," in Gibraltar Bay. 3 pp.

Giving a particular account of a disagreeable affair which passed at the ball at Court, on Monday, the 5th inst., between the Russian and French Ambassadors, when the latter pushed himself with some violence in between the Imperial and Russian Ambassadors on to the bench on which they were sitting, which occasioned some warm words between them, Count Czernicheff going so far as to tell Count Châtelet that it was impertinent. More high words ensued at their going away, and on the staircase. By the King's orders, Lord Rochford and he (Lord Weymouth) waited on the French and Russian Ambassadors to prevent any mischief happening. The next morning Count Châtelet waited on the Russian Ambassador, and said he was sorry that such an affair had happened. The latter appears satisfied with the excuses made to him for the personal incivility, but considers his Court highly insulted; and thus the affair remains between the two Courts of Petersburg and France.

In reply to his Lordship's most secret letter of the 9th inst.

Since transmitting his most secret despatch to the Duke of Grafton, has had made out an alphabetical list of the members of the House of Commons, in which the new members are particularly marked, and the whole described so as to show how they are disposed, and by whom influenced, and containing an observation on each individual. This work was not perfected while Sir George Macartney was in Ireland, and it was not possible to send it over to him until the week before last. Refers his Lordship and His Majesty's other servants to this list for information upon the head of numbers. Sir George has orders to attend with it. It will show that, allowing the Duke of Leinster and the principal servants of the Crown to influence the numbers therein mentioned, it is by no means improbable that the business of the Government may be carried without their support; and from this foundation it will be judged whether he (the Lord Lieutenant) was too sanguine in not despairing of a majority in the first Session.

As to a moral certainty of securing the views of Government, and producing positive engagements, is at a loss how to answer that expectation. Cannot confer separately with each individual; nor has he the means of fixing fluctuating members. If that list affords encouragement to think well of the present situation, particular acquisitions must, and, in his opinion, may, without any great danger, be left to the accidental operations of prudent management. The numbers are calculated upon very mature consideration, and with all possible exactness and impartiality. Has reason to think that not only many of those who are termed doubtful may be brought to support Government, but that many of those who are put down against it as being influenced by Mr. Ponsonby and Mr. Loftus will, if Government shall continue firm, and determine to keep its hands shut against those who oppose it, make little difficulty of quitting connexions from which they are likely to derive no advantages. Submits, therefore, to

His Majesty's determination, whether another conference upon the particular points of the Money Bill and the Augmentation be advisable for the following reasons:—

With regard to the Money Bill or additional duties which are granted from two years to two years to supply the deficiency of the hereditary revenue, there is not the smallest foundation to imagine that they will be refused. In his opinion such an idea does not exist, and he would be sorry that the possibility of such a measure should be first suggested by Government itself. In the Duke of Dorset's last administration, when party raged with a vehemence hardly ever known before in Ireland, the usual supplies were granted nemine contradicente. In the last Session a short Money Bill was, indeed, menaced by the servants of the Crown or their followers, and it met with general disgust. It was, however, moved, and, not being seconded by one member in Committee of Supply, was given up. But it was not in the contemplation of any man not to grant the supply at all; and in fact there is such a profusion of grants in the Money Bill, such as for bounties for encouraging the hempen and flaxen manufactures, for charter schools, for the Dublin Society, for navigations and other works, for paying the allowances to the Speaker and to the servants of the House of Commons, and for so many other purposes, (all which grants are taken out of the additional duties, and must of course cease with them,) that the members of Parliament are almost as much interested in passing the Money Bill as the Crown itself; and therefore, as matters stand at present, it is not to be supposed that that Bill can possibly be rejected.

With regard to the Augmentation, notwithstanding the endeavours to render that measure unpopular, is satisfied that the generality of the kingdom acknowledge the necessity of it. During the last Session particular points of economy, and some little concessions in favour of Ireland, were suggested in his despatches; and if it had been thought proper to comply with any of them, it would have smoothed the way for the success of that measure; and from the opinions of the firmest friends of Government here, as well as from the declarations of many who voted against it, is justified in concluding that, with proper modifications, it may be carried without the assistance of Mr. Ponsonby and his friends.

But if, notwithstanding this opinion as to these two points, His Majesty shall think it expedient to have an explicit declaration, will, upon hearing further, implicitly obey His Majesty's commands.

The plan proposed in his Excellency's letter to the Duke of Grafton was calculated for the purpose of establishing the authority of English Government upon an honorable and lasting foundation. But if the circumstances of the times will not admit an object of such importance to be undertaken immediately, if the servants of the Crown are to remain in their present situations, it is his duty to submit, and he will strenuously pursue any commands which he shall receive for the conduct of affairs in this kingdom, trusting to His Majesty's justice and goodness that opportunities shall be made as soon as possible for providing for some of the most eminent of those gentlemen who so honorably supported Government last Session of Parliament, who are still ready to do the same, and upon whom he will principally depend for the success of His Majesty's affairs, and that they shall, in all marks of favour which Government may have to bestow, be considered before those who, without any provocation, have, by all the means in their power, involved it in difficulty and distress. His Excellency stands pledged to these gentlemen that their fidelity and zeal shall be rewarded. The application he made to them for assistance was previously approved of by His Majesty, and readily given by them when asked. Nor was it asked while there was any prospect that the servants of the Crown would do their duty. It is most essential to His Majesty's service that some of the principal of those gentlemen should be brought forward before the meeting of Parliament, to mark His Majesty's determination, that although he may suffer his servants before mentioned to remain as they are for the present, yet that the power of this kingdom is not to return to its late channel. If this be done, the numbers for Government will daily increase. At the very moment of writing can assure his Lordship that, notwithstanding all the reports of the strength of the opposition, and of his Excellency's being about to be removed, he has received strong proofs of the disposition of many to decide for Government who are not numbered for it in the list.

P.S.—Proposes setting out immediately to finish a view he had begun of the southern parts of Ireland in order to make a general report to His Majesty of the deplorable state of military affairs in the kingdom, and to suggest some remedies. Lord Shannon is at Cork. Hopes to receive there His Majesty's further orders. Can confer at that place with Lord Shannon, and on his return will or will not send for Mr. Ponsonby according to His Majesty's commands. It appears better at this critical time to take the opportunity of conversing with Lord Shannon at Cork, than to desire his attendance in Dublin, which would give an idea of great weight and importance to him and his party, and might diminish the confidence of the friends of Government.—Dublin Castle. 11 $\frac{3}{4}$ pp.

1236. R. SUTTON to MRS. KATHERINE INGLIS.

Lord Rochford is always willing to assist any of His Majesty's subjects in their applications to His Majesty where he can do it with propriety, but it is entirely unusual for His Majesty to lay his commands on his officers to undertake the cause of a particular person in a matter of civil right; and his Lordship does not doubt but that there are to be found persons of the profession of the law in Scotland, of spirit and integrity, not to be intimidated or biassed by the high station of her adversary if she has justice on her side.

Annexed is a letter from her, asking Lord Rochford to lay her affair before His Majesty, and get for her the assistance of the Lord Advocate, with a paper stating the case of her family against the Lord President of Scotland. The latter relates to the sale of part of her mother's estate, which was bought by the Lord President. She says that, could a lawyer have been had for money, she would not have troubled his Lordship, but that the fear of the President deterred the lawyers from taking the cause in hand. She dates her letter from her brother's house, who was a surgeon at Stratford near Bow. 7 pp.

Acknowledges his letter of the 24th inst.; and though the King is at Richmond, the Duke of Grafton and most of H.M.'s servants out of town, and the post just going out, cannot help expressing his satisfaction at finding his Excellency enter entirely into the spirit and meaning of his letter of the 9th, and congratulating him on the apparent prospect of his securing the reasonable views of Government. It is certainly impossible to confer separately with each individual. Is of his Excellency's opinion that there is no necessity for another conference on the particular points, and wishes that he would not even speak to Lord Shannon unless he should see an opening that may make it necessary.

In reply to their letter of the 22nd past. Commodore Spry has almost entirely executed the commission with which he was entrusted. Expects daily to learn that matters are amicably adjusted with the Emperor of Morocco, which was the great object of that commission. As, therefore, there seems no occasion for giving Capt. Proby a credential to the Emperor, which would occasion a considerable expense in presents for no purpose, is directed to signify the King's pleasure to Commodore Spry that the moment he has brought affairs to a conclusion, the object of his commission ceases. He is also to be directed to bring home the two frigates and two sloops which were sent out to him.—St. James's.

very day on which he received his Lordship's intelligence concerning the contagious distemper amongst the horned cattle at Dungarvan, which appeared to be a matter of such very high importance that he immediately postponed his journey. Will not proceed on it until he can transmit the most authentic accounts on that matter. Mr. Ponsonby is gone or going to Lord Shannon's, in the county of Cork, to stay until the middle of next month. Will wait with impatience for His Majesty's determination in regard to another conference, but will freely own that his own inclinations are not to speak to Lord Shannon or Mr. Ponsonby on the particular points unless he sees an opening that may make it necessary. Will be very happy if His Majesty's commands shall allow him to pursue that conduct. The Duke of Leinster last year expressed himself a friend to the Augmentation in principle, but wished only some modification, particularly in point of economical regulation. Is told that his friends continue to hold the same language; nor ought he to doubt his Grace's consistency, should he, the Lord Lieutenant, be authorized by His Majesty to open any terms of that sort. Hopes Sir George Macartney has communicated the fresh acquisitions since the last state of the numbers, and the secret authorities upon which they are founded. Cannot but think that we have a full share of the doubtful list of 63, exclusive of those persons of great personal abilities who would be secured to Government if the situations he proposed were opened to them. Is sure his Lordship's discernment will then in a very few minutes go to the true state of things.—Dublin Castle. "Private."

1248. The SAME to the LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND.

His letter of the 24th inst. has met with His Majesty's most gracious approbation.

Has received the alphabetical list of the House of Commons, with some additional explanations from Sir George Macartney. The method is clear and intelligible, and the observations so satisfactory that he must own that his Excellency was not too sanguine in saying that he did not despair of a majority next Session. As the numbers are calculated upon very mature consideration, and with all possible exactness and impartiality, is clearly of his Excellency's opinion that the rest may be trusted to prudent management and the firmness of Government. There being no doubt of either, thinks it a moral certainty that his Excellency will carry through the business of next winter successfully. The reasons given against another conference upon the particular points of the Money Bill and the Augmentation have appeared to His Majesty satisfactory. The apprehensions in England with regard to the first were, not that it would be entirely refused, but that a short Money Bill might be attempted,—as menaces of that sort have been before thrown out, even by servants of the Crown. Is very glad, however, to find that his Excellency talks with so much assurance on that head. Will say nothing as to the proper modifications which would make the Augmentation go down until he hears the opinions which his Excellency may have formed on that subject.

It is intended to pay all proper attention to a plan calculated for the purpose of establishing the authority of English Government on an honourable and lasting foundation. Nor do the circumstances of the time discourage the undertaking an object of such importance. Nor is it His Majesty's pleasure that any of his servants who shall obstruct his reasonable views of this kind should remain in their present situation after they have given undoubted marks of their opposition to the measures which shall be best suited for that purpose. But should they, on more mature deliberation, give his Excellency reason to expect that he shall not be dissatisfied with their conduct, other opportunities must be found as soon as possible for providing for some of the most eminent of those gentlemen who so honourably supported Government during the last Session of Parliament. Asks for his Excellency's more particular opinion, as soon as possible, as to how this should be done.

1267. ROBT. WOOD to MR. COOPER.

Relative to Lieut. Maine, a half-pay officer in the British Artillery, and in full pay in the service of Portugal, who, having discovered a mine in that country, was suspected of returning to England to engage miners to go from hence to work it. Understanding at the time that there was a difficulty in sending directions to the revenue officers in the western ports, as requested in his letter written in February last, Mr. Hussey, member for East Loe, having been consulted, a messenger was sent down with a letter from him to Mr. Allen, a lawyer at Truro, and principally concerned in the mines in that neighbourhood, desiring him to watch Lieut. Maine's motions in case he should arrive in that country, and to prevent his succeeding in any design of the kind. Notwithstanding this, as will be seen by the enclosed copies of letters from Mr. Lyttelton, English miners have actually got over to Portugal. Mr. Hussey had immediate notice of it. Enclosed are copies of two letters from him, the last of which contains two affidavits he has with some difficulty procured. As Lieut. Maine, to whom they relate, is now in London, and may be heard of by sending to Henry Otto, one of H.M.'s messengers, who has attended his motions since his arrival in town, Lord Weymouth desires, if it shall be thought advisable by the Lords of the Treasury, that their Solicitor may be directed to take such steps therein as the law directs. It is necessary that no time should be lost, and that the strictest secrecy should be maintained, for if Lieut. Maine should have the least suspicion that these affidavits have been made (which he may possibly have heard from the parties), he will certainly not remain here. Has written to Mr. Hussey, desiring him to obtain more affidavits and further lights on this subject.

1268. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to LORD [WEYMOUTH].

Two despatches of this date:—

1. In answer to his letter of the 8th past. To the importance of the matters contained therein must be ascribed his long silence. The detail entered into by him in the alphabetical list of the members of the House of Commons, which proved satisfactory, certainly opens a very favourable prospect; but the numbers calculated for Government will not remain steady, nor can any new acquisitions be fixed, unless gentlemen can be convinced that they shall be considered and firmly supported.

With regard to the modifications with which the Augmentation should be qualified, in his Excellency's correspondence with the Earl of Shelburne during the last Session of Parliament will be found everything suggested that he was then able to collect. But, as desired, hazards such opinions as he has been able to form.

The modification most desired is the security that 12,000 men shall be kept in Ireland. Finds that some of the most considerable men of the country and best friends of Government are far from adopting the idea flung out last Sessions that this security should be in an Irish Act, and would be fully satisfied with an assurance from the Crown that the above number shall be at all times kept in Ireland, except in the cases of an actual invasion of or rebellion in Great Britain. If this security be thought proper, and some economical regulations be made, whenever the sense of Government shall be marked by empowering him (the Lord Lieutenant) to dispose of the revenue employments as mentioned in his most secret despatch to the Duke of Grafton of the 21st April last, the Augmentation may be carried in opposition to all those alliances who defeated it in the last Parliament.

With respect to the reduction of the regiments of horse as proposed by the Duke of Leinster, cannot see that it will produce any great saving to the kingdom. The officers, most of whom have probably purchased, must have pensions, the men be disbanded, and new ones raised. The dragoon is already so distressed that he apprehends it will soon be necessary to increase his pay. Regiments of horse are less adapted to Ireland than the lighter species of cavalry; yet, as the men are of a stature and shape more fit for horse than any other corps, and are well inclined to serve, it were a pity their country should not avail itself of their service. The clothing, arming, and accoutring the troops of the Irish establishment when employed out of the kingdom would certainly give much satisfaction. It is an indulgence of the same nature as that wished for in point of trade. Whenever Great Britain can allow Ireland some branch of the British manufactures which are declining or gone to our enemies, particularly if Ireland might be allowed a free exportation of woollen goods, for instance, under 5s. a yard, or under such other price as should be thought more proper, it would certainly be a great blessing to His Majesty's wretched subjects in Ireland.

The staff seems to be the regulation that might best convey His Majesty's attention to the address of the Commons last Session upon the Military Enquiry; and, perhaps, with the least detriment to H.M.'s service. Should it be reduced to a commander-in-chief and four or five general officers, the Parliament, which has recommended that measure, could hardly complain if those officers who were discontinued had pensions on the Irish establishment; or, perhaps, a declaration from the Crown that the staff should be left to diminish by degrees, by death or otherwise, might have nearly the same effect. At the same time, the pay of the general officers is very unequal to the service. Represents the benefits which would arise if these officers were to be stationed nearer the troops, and the troops brought into closer proximity. Proposes soon to lay a plan for this purpose at His Majesty's feet.

A friendly intercourse with the Duke of Leinster gave him very lately a second conference. His Grace was in general steady to his former opinions, but he mentioned that if Great Britain would for the future take into her own pay such part of the 12,000 men as she might at any time have occasion to draw from Ireland, it would be better than any other security that could be formed; yet, when asked whether, if His Majesty should concur in all or part of these points, he would support the Augmentation, he answered coolly, he never made any engagements.

Has not been idle since his, Lord [Weymouth's], despatch of the 8th past, even in the almost empty city, to collect the sentiments of people on this important matter; but it would be endless to go over the various propositions which are started by the different views and passions of men the moment it is known that the Crown is inclined to a modification. There are some who think this a proper occasion for acquiring to the Irish Parliament the right of voting their own army every Session, as is now done in the British Parliament; nor can any man say what new ideas may be sported in these times unless Government be put upon a firmer footing. If none of the before-mentioned expedients be approved of, must request that any other modification which His Majesty shall think more proper may be signified to him. For himself, declares that he cannot suggest any other which so well answers the purpose.

Asks what answer is to be given to the questions which will certainly be put to him when the Augmentation comes to be proposed again, concerning the report of the Committee appointed last Sessions of Parliament to enquire into the military establishment of Ireland, which was put into the hands of H.M.'s military servants in England. They enabled Lord Shelburne to say that it might be made a foundation for some useful alterations, but his Excellency has not heard that they have come to any determination thereupon.

Understands that it is intended to allow further time to His Majesty's servants to recollect themselves, and that, if they should, upon more mature deliberation, give reason to expect that their conduct will meet with his Excellency's satisfaction, other opportunities must be found as soon as possible for the gentlemen recommended for marks of favour. After His Majesty's approbation of his reasons against a second conference, he certainly will make no advance towards it, and he does not at all expect that the persons in question will be the first to propose it to him. How far they may declare in support of this measure by their friends on the other side of the water he knows not; but his own experience of them will not allow him to make their support any part of his calculation. As to finding other opportunities for providing for the friends of Government, its favours have been anticipated to such a degree, by grants of employments for life and in reversion for life, and by filling others with double names, that the Lord Lieutenant (he speaks from his own knowledge and feelings) has hardly anything to dispose of, however pressing the occasion may be, for the better carrying on His Majesty's business; whilst, by the variety of valuable places which the first Commissioner of the Revenue is allowed to give away, his influence is universally diffused, and operates every hour in every part of the kingdom. Knows of no provision which can be made for the gentlemen whom he would wish to have brought forward, other than that proposed in his most secret despatch of the 21st April to the Duke of Grafton. Must recommend it as most essential that the plan there submitted be steadily pursued; that a beginning be made, by immediately transferring to H.M.'s Chief Governor from the Board of Revenue the disposal of the places specified in the said despatch (which may be done by letter from the Commissioners of the Treasury to the Commissioners of the Revenue in Ireland); by removing before the meeting of Parliament Lord Shannon, Lord Lanesborough, and Mr. Ponsonby, and substituting in their places the Earl of Drogheda to the Ordnance, and Sir Wm. Osborne and Mr. Beresford to the Board of Revenue; and by empowering him (the Lord Lieutenant) to promise in His Majesty's name to Mr. Flood the next vacant seat at that Board, and to make the other removals and promotions, &c. therein mentioned at his own discretion and at his own time. Asks that no time may be lost in informing him whether His Majesty will condescend to these several particulars; for, as he cannot expect that the friends of Government will return a second time to the charge, or that they or the new members will commit themselves in opposition to the old connexions which they have so long ruled, and which they shall see likely to rule this kingdom, it will be impossible for him to answer for the success of any of His Majesty's measures next winter. In saying this, he speaks not only from his own judgment, but from the opinion of the first men and of the best supporters of Government. In a deplorable situation is the Lord Lieutenant who is to undertake for the success of His Majesty's measures, whilst there is a power in the kingdom able at any time to counteract him. Nor is his Secretary less so, if he is to rely upon servants of the Crown who may suddenly throw the whole weight of their measures upon him whenever their caprice or ambition may prompt them, and leave him almost single and unsupported after the services of the first gentlemen in the kingdom, both for character and abilities, have been rejected. Nothing can be so fatal to His Majesty's service as that his affairs should be suffered to relapse into the same precarious and subordinate situation in which they stood the last Sessions; and there is no one who may not meet the ensuing Parliament with a better prospect than himself, if he is not only to lose the confidence but to expect the reproaches of the former friends of Government. To enlarge the ground of Government, and to recover its vigour and authority, has been his first and great object. It depends upon English Government to pursue and confirm this system, but, until this be done, the Lord Lieutenant is a mere pageant of State.—Dublin Castle. 13 pp.

2. The second despatch is marked "Separate and secret."

Having lately taken occasion to talk with the Attorney General upon the tumultuous and dangerous disposition of faction in England, and the repeated though ineffectual efforts to raise the same spirit in Ireland, his Excellency found him convinced of the necessity of resisting such attempts here for the sake of both kingdoms, and received from him the fullest assurances of his determination to support his (Lord Townshend's) administration. Being immediately informed of the intention to renew the measure of the Augmentation, accompanied with proper modifications, he said that he was extremely well inclined towards it, and only wished for such modifications as might facilitate the measure without drawing on any discussion on constitutional points. As no one knows this country better, will hereafter lay before him, Lord [Weymouth], his ideas on this head. This declaration from Mr. Tisdall is the more satisfactory, as it was made in the most cordial manner, and without any stipulation for himself or others. He can bring with him two members, who in the alphabetical list were put down against Government. Expects to gain two more from the opposition by the death of old Mr. O'Neile. If the general report, nay even the direct information of particular persons, may be credited, Mr. Ponsonby has been extremely active since the last Session in his endeavours to keep his old friends steady, and to acquire new ones; but there is no reason to think that he has been able to effect any alteration in the list, except in two instances; the one respecting a gentleman related to him, for whose brother he, the Lord Lieutenant, some time since solicited a pension; and another, whose father was likewise connected with him. These are a people ever ready to make all the advantages they can of Government for their own purposes, at the same time that they abide by the factions of their own country,—a game which they have often played with the greatest success at the expense of English Government.

Does not recollect a single person of any consequence in the neighbourhood of Dublin whom he has not discoursed with and endeavoured to gain, save only Mr. Prime Serjeant, from whom he has not heard one syllable since the conference mentioned in his despatch to the Duke of Grafton. Thinks he will be best secured by seeing Sir William Osborne and Mr. Flood received into His Majesty's service, in which case this opposition will give no disquiet. His Lordship may be assured that if his (the Lord Lieutenant's) recommendations be adopted, friends will be confirmed, the support of new and very able persons will be acquired, and the strength of Government established on a very honourable footing. Proposes in a few days to set out for his southern tour; in his way will fall in with several members whom there is reason to regard as well inclined. Sir George Macartney will wait upon him, Lord [Weymouth], with a list of such members as, it is hoped, through his Lordship's intercession, will make their appearance at the opening of the Session, their presence being particularly necessary to oppose the money grants ;—against which, if Lord Shannon and Mr. Ponsonby had made the stand that they might and ought, His Majesty had neither heard of modifications, nor the country been alarmed with the insidious rumours of fresh taxation. The establishment of an Order like that of the Thistle or Bath would be received with the greatest gratitude.—Dublin Castle. 5 pp.

Has sent Col. Fraser, who is a very intelligent and prudent man, with these despatches, to explain particulars of his Excellency's situation here. Is assured that there are many gentlemen at this moment connected with Mr. Ponsonby, who only wait to see whether English Government will or will not resume its authority to quit or continue that connexion. Is very clear that, whatever modification His Majesty may approve of for the Augmentation, it ought to make part of the speech from the throne, especially as it will furnish the strongest argument to the friends of Government for opposing the exorbitant grants in the Money Bill, part of which grants ought to be reserved to pay the expenses of that measure.—Dublin Castle. 2 pp.

Arrived here yesterday, having despatched the "Swan" to Gibraltar with a letter to Commodore Proby (copy enclosed), with an account of his having looked into Tangier and Larache, and of every occurrence that had happened since his departure from thence. Would transmit also a copy of the account he left Mr. Proby of the present situation of H.M.'s affairs in Morocco and the other Barbary states, but that it, and the several papers it refers to, would make too large a packet for this conveyance. Hopes to deliver it very soon in person. Will start for England the moment he receives Mr. Proby's answer to enable him to determine whether to leave the "Carysfort" and the sloops under his command till it shall be discovered what the Emperor's intentions are in fitting out his fleet.—"Jersey," in Cadiz Bay.

The enclosure. At Tangier, Mr. Spry learnt that Mr. Adams was at Morocco, where he went to complain of the Alcáide of Mogador in giving the Spaniards the preference in loading. The Emperor told him that it was his order that the Spaniards should have the preference in all his ports, and abused him very much, and said he should try what the English would do in March next. Lord Weymouth, who is at Longleat, being very desirous that his Excellency should have an explicit answer to the most material part of his dispatch by Col. Fraser, sent orders to deliver the assurances he had to make on that head to Sir George Macartney or Col. Fraser. But neither of these gentlemen being about to return to Ireland, sends Lord Weymouth's message in his own words, which he borrowed from a paragraph in his, the Lord Lieutenant's, separate and secret letter. "In order to confirm your Excellency's friends, to acquire the support of new and able persons, and to establish the strength of Government upon an honorable footing, it is intended that you shall have the powers which you desired over the Revenue employments; and the changes which you have recommended at that Board and in the Ordnance will be approved."

Ireland,
v. 436,
No. 10 a to d.1283. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to LORD VISCOUNT WEYMOUTH.

Having upon his tour taken every proper occasion to sound the intentions of such persons as fell in his way with respect to the measure which His Majesty has so much at heart, has found people in general well convinced of the expediency of it. His opinion of the success of it is confirmed, provided any assurance can be given with regard to the 12,000 men remaining in the kingdom. Any military regulations made in consequence of the address of the House of Commons the last Session will give this question a further advantage. One idea, which prevails strongly in the minds of many worthy and independent men, is that if England were to take upon her own establishment such regiments as shall hereafter be removed from that of this kingdom, they would gladly pay 20,000 without any other modification.

His Majesty's commission was received with every demonstration of respect at the city of Cork, and indeed in most places through which his Excellency passed. Encloses two addresses, which will best speak how ineffectual every attempt has hitherto been to prejudice the minds of the people of this kingdom against views of Government. Has seen both Lord Shannon and Mr. Ponsonby. Dined with the former on the way, that he might not be supposed to avoid any opportunity which they might wish to take of communicating their sentiments. Has had some communication with them since, which ended only in their resolution to oppose the Augmentation if proposed again in the same mode; but they have no particular mode of their own to suggest, further than what was mentioned in his despatch to Lord Shelburne when they defeated this measure the last Session. Upon this head as well as the money grants Mr. Ponsonby was as undecided and unintelligible as ever, referring everything to his friends in general, and to the consideration of a future day. This is the critical situation of His Majesty's affairs on the eve of the new Sessions, which he thinks highly necessary to represent, and has therefore sent over Mr. Swan from Dungarvan with this despatch. At the same time there is nothing popular or formidable in these persons or their party. It is the power they derive from the Crown, and exercise so fully and largely over the kingdom, which subjects the minds of the people to them; and there is good reason to suppose that neither Lord Shannon nor Mr. Ponsonby could preserve even their common provincial influence without their offices. The Octennial Bill gave the first blow to the dominion of aristocracy in Ireland; and it rests with Government to second the good effects of it, and to re-establish its own authority by disarming those who have turned their arms against it. Must once more protest that he has neither personal predilection nor dislike to any man in this kingdom any further than as he stands disposed to His Majesty's service and that of this country. The wishes of His Majesty's subjects here are to second his intentions and merit his favour and protection, instead of being directed to the views of a party; but until Government shall re-assume its own just and constitutional authority, neither the army, nor the revenue which is to support it, nor even the justice of the kingdom, can be properly directed.

The army is by no means situated or quartered where it may best assemble for the defence of the kingdom, or the support of civil magistrates or the revenue. Has continual applications for troops to execute the common civil duties of the country, and to protect the possessions of H.M.'s subjects, at the same time that these difficulties are raised against the necessary increase of the very thing which they call out for. And at the very hour they complain of the insufficiency of funds to support this moderate and essential augmentation of the military establishment, the revenue has suffered no less than from 12,000*l.* to 13,000*l.* by an East India ship this year in the port of Cork, and 10,000*l.* in the tobacco duty by smuggling in parts where a well placed barrack or two would prevent it. No less than 3,800 looms have within a very few years fallen into disuse at Cork and its neighbourhood (from these East India ships) which were worked only for home consumption, whereby many of the people are starving, and many others gone to France.

By the death of Mr. Agar, a gentleman comes into Parliament who is certainly for the Augmentation. Upon the whole, the numbers for Government are increased. And from the general disposition of the people, is confirmed in his opinion that whenever they shall be convinced that they are not to fall again under the same management as they have been, His Majesty may easily carry this and many other salutary measures into execution upon that plan which he (the Lord Lieutenant) submitted in his last despatch.—Youghall. “Most secret and separate.”

Copies of the two addresses referred to,—from the Corporation of Cork, and the Weavers and Manufacturers of the city and county of Cork, respectively.

Another letter was also sent with this despatch, with a request on the back from Lord Townshend that the leave asked might be granted for the purpose mentioned therein. It is from Mr. Nathaniel Clements, at the Treasury Chambers, stating that a son whom he intended to bring in for one of the boroughs for which he himself was returned, would be unable to attend the next Sessions of Parliament on account of ill-health; and that therefore he intended bringing in another son, Lieut.-Colonel of the 69th Regiment, for whom leave of absence was required. 13 pp. or parts of pp.

His Majesty is thoroughly persuaded that his Excellency would not wish to come to those extremities could they be avoided, and that the powers which the conduct of some gentlemen have made so necessary will be applied to salutary purposes. v. 159, No. 37.1296. MOROCCO.

"Copies of two letters from Mr. George Adams to Commodore "Spry, dated Mogador, the 18th and 26th of September 1769.
"Received 18th of November."

Can now confirm what he said in a previous letter, that the orders given to the cruisers are not any ways prejudicial to our nation; but the Emperor still seems determined next spring to bring things to extremities if they are not previously settled. Should he once give his cruisers an order to take all British vessels, he would always have several rich cargoes and 200 or 300 slaves in his country before our Government could prevent him. And then, pray, what satisfaction can be got from him, or in what manner could the English do him an equivalent injury? Should they fit out vessels, and come and bombard and beat down every seaport town on the coast, he would not be sensible of it, as the houses all belong to Christians, Moors, and Jews, who would be obliged to rebuild them at their own expense; and he would not send his cruisers any more to sea when the stroke was done, but lay them up in Sallee river out of reach, and as soon as the vessels disappeared send them out again to bring in others. Has been 10 years in Barbary, and has seen almost every nation at variance with him one after another, and every one at last has been obliged to come to his terms, with the additional expense of an ambassador, ransoms, presents, &c. In this Emperor's father's time the Dutch made a large armament to come against Sallee, and it was supposed by everybody they would have quite destroyed the place. He asked some Europeans how much such an expedition might cost, and, on being told, made answer, "Let them send me only one quarter of the sum, and I will send my army and destroy the place and every soul in it." The stopping his trade is impossible, as it is carried on by so many different nations, who will always be ready to assist him. The French, after having made several attempts in vain to molest his ports, were obliged to beg for a peace, and sent out an ambassador with immense presents. Sends his sentiments on this affair, as he would willingly see it settled to mutual satisfaction, and not out of any consideration to his own business or effects in the country, as he is well assured, even in the event of a war, the sums he yearly gives the Emperor's ports would protect him, without making him any sufferer thereby. Has excused to the Emperor the appearance of our cruisers on the coast.

S. Sumbel is his, Mr. Adams's, very good friend. He was with Abdalla Bumelsoe to receive Commodore Spry in 1766 at Tetuan. By his means knows all that is done at Court, having obliged him when he was in distress. He told him (Adams) as to the contents of a letter that Col. Boyd sent by the Jew Ben Amour, the Genoese interpreter, to the Emperor. The Genoese have made a truce as well as the Portuguese. The Emperor is now at peace with everybody but the Leghornese, who will also soon be here.

The second letter reports nothing new to have occurred. The Emperor is preparing to make a stay at this place (Mogador) for six or seven weeks. The Commodore's vessels appearing so often on the coast at different places has had a very good effect; for though it is not prudent to come to extremities with a people where neither honour nor profit is to be gained, the offer of the sword or olive-branch has a remarkable effect; and one is never so well used by them as when they are apprehensive you can hurt them. Esteem or regard they are strangers to. The Moors have a great opinion of the English being able to ruin all their cruisers in a few days at sea, and the sailors and officers would not willingly obey, were they ordered out to sea, if at war with us. But were they once to find we should do them no more harm than other nations have done, we should lose an advantage their fears have given us. 10 pp.

1297. COMMODORE SPRY to LORD VISCOUNT WEYMOUTH.

Gives an account of the precautions he took for the protection of our trade against any hostile attempts of the Emperor, of which he was rather apprehensive from the late very unfavourable sentiments of His Imperial Majesty. The letter received from Mr. Adams (a copy enclosed) confirms, however, the advices received three days before from him by express, that the Emperor had no design of breaking with His Majesty at least for this year.

Was detained at Cadiz till yesterday by an unlucky accident. Mr. Hugh Tonken, master's mate, Messrs. William Carlyon, William Fulk Greville, Nathaniel Stuart, midshipmen, and Mr. Jonathan Skinn, surgeon's mate, belonging to the "Jersey," being on shore at Cadiz, the 16th inst., were seized by the guards on the Mole with a quantity of money about them, which they were very imprudently attempting to convey on board some merchant vessel in the Bay, and were, by order of the Governor, confined in the Castle of St. Catherine. Was in hopes their youth and ignorance of the laws would have induced the Governor to give them up on the application of H.M.'s Consul; but, that failing of the desired effect, was obliged to make a formal demand of them, by letter of the 18th, in the King's name, which, the Governor having refused except on certain conditions that he did not think himself authorised to subscribe to, he afterwards repeated by letter of the 20th and 23rd; but the Governor still persisted in detaining them in prison. Having transmitted to Mr. Harris, Secretary to H.M.'s Embassy at Madrid, an account of the affair, and entreated him to lay the same before the Court of Spain, does not doubt but that they will be delivered up immediately. Has, therefore, left the "Otter" at Cadiz, to receive them on board, and carry them to England. Sends copies of the several letters that passed between the Governor of Cadiz and himself upon this occasion, and of those he wrote to Mr. Harris. As it cannot be denied but that those five young gentlemen being stopped together, and money found upon them, appears as if they had been employed or authorised for this purpose, begs leave to observe that this certainly is not the case; for, from his first arrival in the Mediterranean, he gave a strict charge to every captain under his command on no account to suffer their officers or people to be concerned in conveying money or any other contraband to or from the Spanish dominions. It appears to him that these youngsters were persuaded to do it in the manner they themselves relate, and that, from their ignorance, it must have been the first time they ever attempted it.

Encloses also an account of his Catholic Majesty's ships at the port of Cadiz the 25th inst., and of those which sailed from thence between the 20th of August and that time; and copies of the several papers left for Mr. Proby's information with respect to His Majesty's affairs in Morocco and the other Barbary states, with an attested copy of his Lordship's most secret letter of 7th March last.—"Jersey," at sea.

The enclosures. The midshipmen declared (36 b) both publicly and privately that they were seduced by a Spaniard whom they were totally unacquainted with to take the money, and carry it on board a boat at the mole head. Three of them (36 c) were under 17 years of age;—one the son of Mr. Greville, the present minister at Bavaria; another the son of Capt. Stuart, of the Navy, who was killed in the late war, gallantly fighting for his country; and the other the son of a gentleman of very good family and fortune in the West of England.

- (1.) The Emperor of Morocco to Commodore Spry, received 22 May 1769.
- (2.) Commodore Spry to the Emperor, 5 June 1769.
- (3.) The Same to Muley Idris, Prince of Morocco, same date.
- (4.) The Same to Viscount Weymouth, 7 June 1769.
- (5.) Captain Cleveland's agreement respecting the quantity of refreshments allowed to be taken on board His Majesty's ships arriving in the Emperor of Morocco's ports, 8 March 1762.
- (6.) Commodore Spry to Viscount Weymouth, 10 June 1769.
- (7.) Mr. Consul Popham to Commodore Spry, same date.

- (8.) Commodore Spry to Mr. Consul Popham, 13 June 1769; and Mr. Popham's reply.
- (9.) The Same to Mr. George Adams, at Mogador, 19 June 1769.
- (10.) Mr. Adams to Commodore Spry, dated Morocco, 2 June 1769.
- (11.) The Same to the Same, 4 July 1769.
- (12.) Mr. Consul Popham to the Same, 27 July 1769.
- (13.) Commodore Spry to Mr. Adams, 1 Aug. 1769.
- (14.) The Same to Mr. Consul Fraser at Algier, 12 Aug. 1769.

Also copies of sundry other papers relating to the affairs of Morocco transmitted to Commodore Proby, 21 September 1769.

Many of these have been already abstracted under previous dates. Mr. Adams, in a letter of 2 June, says (36 p. p. 37) that what the Emperor would have was an Ambassador, and that he wished Captain Milbank to be the man, for whom he had publicly expressed much esteem. Mr. Adams sent a note (36 p. p. 39) of the most proper things for a present to the Emperor, which would cost altogether about 5,000*l*. The Emperor shows great satisfaction in obliging the Spaniards. He believed (36 p. p. 42) that he would "yet sell them (the Spaniards) the ports" of Tetuan, Tangier, and Larache, to say the provisions," which, if accomplished, Commodore Spry thought (36 p. p. 49) would inevitably be the occasion of a war both with the Emperor and the Spaniards. A fresh outrage had been committed on His Majesty's subjects by a cruiser of Algiers (36 p. p. 52). As a sort of apology for the imprisonment of Mr. Popham, the Emperor sent back double the amount of cloth, dollars, &c., which had been exacted from him. This being returned, his Imperial Majesty took it very ill (36 q. p. 3), saying that it appeared as if the English were determined to do their utmost to displease him. The Moor that carried the letters to Tetuan for opening the communication had the box delivered to him there. He thought it was some present for the Emperor, and had near lost his head when it was opened before His Majesty; but, fortunately for him, he happened to be the nephew of the greatest Bashaw at Court, who interceded for him.

Among others is a copy of a letter from the Emperor's cousin, Muley Idris, Prince of Morocco, to Commodore Spry (36 q. p. 5), in which he calls himself "a friend to the English." He describes (36 q. p. 6) how a letter from a Jew named Tollidano, at Gibraltar, containing information that Commodore Spry was coming on the coast with four men-of-war and two bomb ketches, &c. to compel the opening of Tetuan, was read to the Emperor by a Jew that was not acquainted with the ways of the Court, but told him word for word the contents. The Prince says that, had he had any news of the said letter, it should never have reached the Emperor's ears, as it very much displeased him. The Prince interposed his good offices to preserve peace with the English, and prevailed with difficulty (36 q. p. 7) upon the Emperor to leave things as they were till the following March, pledging his word for the English, "yet making his [Imperial Highness's] pleasure" before that time. For that purpose he strongly recommended (36 q, p. 8) the sending of an ambassador.

Mr. Adams was certain (36 q, p. 10) that the Emperor was fully determined to attempt the capture of Centa [at that time in the possession of the Spaniards], but would delay the same until a war arose between England and Spain. He told Mr. Adams that he only waited for that event to join the Spaniards; but Mr. Adams well knew he designed the contrary, and that was one reason why he was so anxious to be on a good footing with us. Their cruisers had orders to attack the Swedes. In his reply to Prince Muley Idris (36 q, p. 12) Commodore Spry contradicts the report that he had appeared on the coast with a hostile intent, and promises on his return to England to recommend to the Ministry to send an ambassador. English and Spanish. 118 pp.

1298. MEDITERRANEAN PASSES.

Commodore Spry's "Remarks on the present abuse of British "Mediterranean passes; with a proposal for preventing the same "in future."

The truly alarming circumstance of the great decline of English seamen, as well as of trade, in the Mediterranean, Mr. Spry attributes chiefly to two causes, which Parliament alone can redress. First, the scandalous use made of our Mediterranean passes, especially by the Genoese, who, by the construction of their vessels, as well as from the difference of pay between Italian and English seamen, navigate at a much cheaper rate than we can possibly afford to navigate at. Hence [secondly] English merchantmen lie idle in port for want of employment, which at length drives their masters to the pernicious practice of quarrelling with and discharging their English seamen, and hiring in their room Italians, with whom they can navigate their ships at half the expense, both with respect to wages and provisions; and the poor Englishman is often turned on shore in a strange place, to starve in the streets, or to enlist in the first foreign service that will take him. Blames the consuls for inattention to the necessities of distressed seamen; but our misfortune is that there are only two ports in the Mediterranean, Cadiz and Leghorn, where there are funds for this most useful charity. Suggests as a remedy that the consuls should have strict orders not to clear out any ship or vessel under English colours which did not comply with the Act of Parliament by navigating with two-thirds British subjects, without very sufficient reasons for the deficiency. The Genoese constantly purchase, at any price, the passes of ships sold or cast away in the Mediterranean, and navigate securely with them; for as few of the Algerines or Moors can read, they are generally satisfied if they find the pass of the proper cut. Has known 800 and 1,000 dollars given for passes of this kind. Gives instances of the abuse, and suggests the infliction of a higher penalty. Subjoins a list of vessels, masters, and their owners, who trade openly under English colours, not one of which has, in his opinion, the least title or pretence to Mediterranean passes.

the latter sailed for England, and of some intelligence he has since obtained relative to the said fleet.

The enclosures. Much of the information contained in them is given in other letters. [See 21 Aug., &c.] It further appears that the Alcaide of Tangier received a letter from the Emperor, which vexed him very much, ordering him to make a present of provisions to any Spanish ship of war that might put in, and to suffer them to purchase what they pleased without paying any duty, and to use them better than the English, as they were the best nation among the Christians, and the English the worst. The writer of the intelligence from Larache states that the Emperor was informed by the Jews of the minutest action that passed in the garrison [of Gibraltar]. On the 30th Aug. orders were received at Tetuan from the Emperor for all governors, captains of ships, and "Proby" to look upon the Portuguese as good friends, and to supply any of their vessels that should come into the Moorish ports with whatever they had occasion for. 18 $\frac{1}{4}$ pp.

Send copies of two letters from Capt. Jervis, Commander of H.M.S. The enclosures. On Captain Jervis's representation of this insult to the British flag (10 d) the slaves were given up; and the Doge and Senate sent, through Mr. Holford, the Consul, a disavowal of the whole proceedings, with an assurance that a process should be commenced against the offenders. Capt. Jervis, not judging this concession adequate to the insult, the Doge and Senate sent to know whether he would be satisfied with their ordering the persons concerned in the transaction to be arrested in the most public manner and committed to prison, but he declared that nothing less would prevent a complaint to his Court than (10 g) the sending the offenders on board his ship. To this demand he could get no reply (10 d). 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ pp.

It is probable that by this time his Excellency is come to a decisive determination as to the hands in which the management of business is to be trusted. His Majesty, therefore, thinks it proper that his Excellency should have his ideas with regard to the Augmentation, in order that arrangements may be taken accordingly. Of the modifications suggested to qualify that measure, that which seems mostly to coincide with his Excellency's own judgment is the mode his Lordship has to recommend, viz. a proper security that 12,000 men shall be kept in the kingdom. And it appearing from his despatch by Col. Fraser "that some of the most considerable men in Ireland and the best friends to Government are far from adopting the idea flung out last Sessions, that their security should be an Irish Act, and would be fully satisfied with an assurance from the Crown that the above number shall at all times be kept in that kingdom for its better defence, except in the case of actual invasion or rebellion in Great Britain," he, the Lord Lieutenant, may consider himself fully authorised to give such an assurance in His Majesty's name. But should it appear necessary, contrary to expectations, to have this security rest upon a clause in an Irish Act of Parliament, he is permitted to adopt that method rather than lose the measure. A draft. 2¾ pp.

1314. The SAME to the SAME.

Before the receipt of his despatch of the 11th inst., had settled his speech, and communicated it to the Speaker and the King's servants here, which precluded him from making any alterations. Has not failed on every occasion to declare the intentions of Government in England to support his administration in Ireland, as signified in letters to him; but as the power over the Revenue employments, which he always proposed should precede any removals, though intended to be given to him, has not yet been granted, he has hitherto been prevented from making those arrangements and removals which he had suggested. And he the rather declined coming to any extremities, having all along observed in his Lordship's despatches a kind of reluctance to any measures that might be thought violent, unless they were unavoidable. Things remain as they were; and he could not venture to take any decided step, either with regard to men or measures, till he knew His Majesty's final determination upon the several modifications contained in his letters of the 17th August last from hence. It naturally followed that he should be as guarded as possible in his speech from the Throne, carefully avoiding to mention the word Augmentation, yet at the same time not precluding himself from bringing it on at the proper season. In this opinion all the servants of the Crown whom he consulted unanimously concurred. This caution was the more necessary, as it would be very hazardous to introduce it into the speech in express words, lest the addresses in return might be conceived in such terms as to prejudice and defeat the measure. In the speech transmitted in the official letter will be found the particular expressions which will be understood plainly to point to the Augmentation. Means in a short time to propose the measure itself, authorised with the assurance in His Majesty's name that 12,000 men shall at all times be kept in the kingdom for its better defence, except in the case of invasion or actual rebellion in Great Britain; and if he finds it cannot be carried upon such assurance, will then have recourse to an Irish Act. Encloses a letter which has fallen into the hands of one of the magistrates who have been most active in bringing to justice the gang of rioters called "cutters," by which it appears that there is a combination between the journeymen weavers in Dublin and London, and a regular correspondence kept up. Chooses to send the original rather than a copy, as the handwriting may lead to some discoveries. Has not yet been able to get any intelligence of the persons to whom this letter is directed, nor of those who are mentioned in it, but has instituted enquiries.

A copy of the enclosure. The letter, with seventeen signatures, is addressed to the committee of silk-weavers in London. They say, "We cannot enough express our grateful thanks to you of your unwearied diligence in giving your estimates of works not in your books of rates, which was the chief play they master weavers of Dublin had to plead upon, except their obstinate and ungenerous tempers, which, we can assure you, is inflexible, for their hearts are like adamant, not to be penetrated, as they glory in endeavouring to distress us." Again, "Your letter has not been shown to any of the tyrants yet, as Mr. Usher is come here (the d——l welcome him), and we doubt not but he has brought over the whole, which we were never afraid nor ashamed to show to honest masters; and that number was very small; for Mr. Armstrong, young Webster, Baltiboys, Kennedy, &c. &c., makes it their business at unseasonable hours to go armed with blunderbusses, pistols, swords, and cutlasses, heading the army and watch, and lodging whom they think proper in Newgate." 1321. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to LORD VISCOUNT WEYMOUTH.

The House of Commons having adjourned for a fortnight, has time to submit to His Majesty's consideration the different modes of carrying the Augmentation into execution which have been proposed by those servants of the Crown whom he has consulted. Lord Annaly, the Attorney General, the Solicitor General, and Mr. Malone advise a message from the King himself under his sign manual, the form of which is enclosed, marked No. 1. Upon a very accurate search of the Journals of Parliament of Ireland, there is no example of the kind to be found. The grounds upon which these gentlemen recommend these measures are that a permanent increase of the military establishment in time of peace is likewise a new measure, and that this mode will be most likely to carry it without having recourse to the Irish Act. The Prime Serjeant, on the other hand, thinks that a message from the Lord Lieutenant, and a security given in an Irish Act of Parliament, as proposed in the scheme enclosed, No. 2, which was delivered by himself to be transmitted to him (Lord Weymouth), would be fully sufficient, and carry the measure in spite of all opposition. This gentleman has offered this mode as a proof of his good intentions to facilitate the King's measures and support his Government, and his Excellency has said everything in his power to engage him, knowing his abilities, and wishing much to have his assistance, which, if given with sincerity, can't fail to be of great service.

These two modes appear to his Excellency to go to great and important constitutional points, in which he desires to be directed by his superiors. Cannot answer how far either of them may be drawn into practice from this precedent, but hopes that no difficulty may prevail on account of His Majesty's sign manual respecting his own particular situation, that may interfere with the success of this great and national measure, for he himself will trust to the good faith with which he has acted to all His Majesty's subjects in Ireland to vindicate him. It would contribute greatly to the success of the measure if he might mention in the message that His Majesty had determined that as the several officers now upon the staff of the Irish establishment should happen to die or be provided for, the numbers should be reduced, and consist of no more than a commander-in-chief and five general officers. Must renew his request for a signification of His Majesty's commands upon this proposal when the answer is returned to the other points of this despatch.

towards the King's service. Has, therefore, of late, made no advances to them, especially as he would not preclude himself from making such changes as the necessity of His Majesty's service shall require. Nor would he lessen the opinion of mankind here that Government hath always in view its own authority and dignity, and the protection of its friends. For this reason must earnestly recommend that some distinguishing marks of His Majesty's goodness may be shown to those who exerted themselves the last Session in his service at the time the Augmentation was tried under every disadvantage. Waits with a good deal of impatience to have some decision relative to the Revenue employments, the delay of which has kept off many persons who are only to be determined by a striking proof of that kind. But as that has not yet taken place, and as the removals ought, at least for some time, to be postponed, hopes His Majesty will grant the peerages which he asked in November 1768. This would be of great use by encouraging the friends of Government, and would enable him to bring a gentleman of distinguished abilities into Parliament in the room of one of the persons proposed to be promoted to the peerage. The Earls of Drogheda and Tyrone have also pressed him extremely to recommend them to be created Marquises. Encloses Lord Tyrone's letter on the subject. This promotion in the peerage of these two noblemen at this critical time would have the best effect, as the one has lost his situation as a Lord Justice, and has persevered in the most uniform and hearty support of Government, and the other now suffers from the weight of party on account of his conduct in the Augmentation; besides that the Duke of Leinster, who has been placed in so singular a degree of elevation, is, according to all appearance, a most declared opponent of the Augmentation in any mode whatever.—Dublin Castle.

The enclosures, being drafts of the King's messages to the two Houses as proposed by the Attorney General and the Lord Lieutenant's message; answer to the same; and heads of a Bill for paying the Augmentation, &c., as proposed by the Prime Serjeant; also Lord Tyrone's letter, in which he states that, in consequence of the position which he took up in regard to the Augmentation, the whole artillery of those persons who might think they had a right to assist their friends, or to punish him for the part he acted, had been levelled, as he foresaw, against his two friends who had been elected for the borough of Swords. 18 pp. or parts of pp.

In answer to his Excellency's private letter of the 17th inst. His reasons for not mentioning the Augmentation in his speech, at the same time not precluding himself from bringing it on in proper season, are very satisfactory; and his intention of proposing the measure in the manner described is perfectly agreeable to His Majesty's commands to him on that head. As to the powers which he wished to have over the Revenue employments, and the changes recommended at that Board and in the Ordnance, they have been granted in the terms in which he desired them, and he was referred to the Treasury for the official forms to carry into execution the alterations in Revenue places. After this very explicit declaration, is at a loss to understand the cause of his Excellency's hesitation. He says he has all along observed in his, Lord Weymouth's, despatches a kind of reluctance to any measures that might be thought violent unless they were unavoidable. Must, in return, observe that he (the Lord Lieutenant) has very properly shown the same reluctance, and he flattered himself that they were perfectly agreed on that head. Could those extremities be avoided, it would be highly improper to suggest them; but his Excellency had the King's assurance that His Majesty was persuaded he would not wish to come to those extremities if they could be avoided; and he was permitted to have recourse to them because they were thought necessary.

Has already taken the steps suggested with regard to gentlemen of the Irish House of Commons residing in England.—A draft. 3 pp.

The letter and narrative enclosed. On going ashore they were informed that the Alcaide had received orders from the Emperor to let the British men-of-war have nothing without paying duty for it, not even a drink of water; to consider them as his worst friends, and treat them as ill as possible. In consequence of these orders the Alcaide cautioned the English Vice-consul to forbid all persons belonging to vessels under English colours to take off the most trifling thing, as their being detected in it would oblige him to seize and send them in chains to the Emperor in order to provide for his own safety, as the Emperor already suspected him of favouring us too much, and had used him ill on that account. The Vice-consul also said that orders were daily expected to seize all the British vessels in that port, and that therefore he intended sending them away, loaded or unloaded, as soon as the weather would permit. The Alcaide himself treated them with great civility. The Emperor had ordered that the Spanish men-of-war and cruisers should be supplied with what necessities they wanted, not only duty-free, but without paying anything for them. 6 pp. or parts of pp.

Ireland,
v. 436, No. 31.1333. LORD WEYMOUTH to the LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND.

In answer to his despatch of the 22nd past. As the King saw no disadvantage to the Augmentation from its not being mentioned in the speech, and as it gave no disappointment on this side, (his Excellency having had no positive commands on that head,) it was needless to take notice of it. His Majesty is glad to find that the adjournment gives time to submit to his consideration those points with regard to this object upon which opinions differ, and in which his Excellency sees matter of so much constitutional importance that he desires to have directions. Had his Excellency shown a preference for either of the modes for carrying the Augmentation into execution, it would have had great weight here, but as the King finds it necessary to determine upon the lights transmitted, he adopts the mode which gives his Excellency the advantage of numbers, and which is supported by four respectable opinions instead of one. Transmits, therefore, His Majesty's message under his sign manual according to the proposed form.

His Excellency's request upon the head of the reduction of the staff supposes that the Prime Serjeant's mode, viz., a message from the Lord Lieutenant, will be adopted. If by that any preference of his Excellency to that mode is to be understood, he is permitted to adopt it instead of the King's message, though it is thought proper he should be prepared for both, and in that case his Excellency will mention in his message the King's determination to lay down the rule proposed with regard to the Irish staff. Has entered into this explanation merely with a view to follow his Excellency's wishes as nearly as he can, and not to confine his request literally to the terms in which it is expressed; as his Excellency will see when told that if he meant to say that such a declaration from His Majesty is necessary at this time to carry the measure in whatever mode it is proposed, he may make such a declaration in whatever shape he shall judge most proper.

As to what his Excellency says of Lord Shannon, Mr. Ponsonby, and their followers, it is impossible to be more explicit than he (Lord Weymouth) has been in his former letters. Will, therefore, only add that his Excellency has the powers which he desired to have, that His Majesty is thoroughly persuaded he would not ask them if he did not think them necessary for his service, and has not the least doubt but whatever use he makes of them will be entirely pointed at that object.

With regard to the peerages and Revenue employments, His Majesty observed that if it is ever proper to distinguish in a very particular manner those who support from those who oppose Government, it is at this juncture; but that, in order to mark that distinction with most advantage to his Excellency's administration, a connected plan should be formed, in which a measure of obvious national utility should be laid down as the test of faction. His Majesty considers the Augmentation, with security for 12,000 men being kept in Ireland, as a proper test of this matter, and cannot suppose but that a majority of the gentlemen of property in Ireland who consult their own interest and the public good must in their hearts be for this measure. Upon the solid ground of this question, His Majesty's disapprobation as well as his favour, properly held out at the same time, would not only have a better effect thus united and co-operating, but would afford this advantage, that the mark of disapprobation would furnish the means for a mark of favour; for there seems no doubt but that a proper resentment of the conduct of enemies will give an opportunity of gratifying friends. Till this experiment is tried, is not permitted to say anything to him on the creation of marquesses at present. But with regard to the peerages asked for in his letters of the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th of last November, it is now thought a proper time to grant them to the gentlemen then named, who are now living, connecting these marks of Royal favour as much as possible with the question of Augmentation,—which, as has been already said, should draw the distinct line between his Excellency's political friends and enemies.

His Lordship considered the powers over the Revenue employments as included in those of placing or displacing the Commissioners, and that the powers over the superior imply the powers over the inferior officers,—whether directly from his Excellency, or through the Board, it matters not. But on this head refers him to a letter which Sir George Macartney will receive in a few days from Mr. Bradshaw.

Cannot let his public despatch go without wishing him successfully through this critical, and, it is to be hoped, decisive point of the Augmentation, though the wishes he has expressed of this kind in his "official" require no comment, as they cover nothing of the Minister. The King has ordered him to say that his Excellency will soon receive a scheme for the staff which will even exceed the economy of his proposal; but as this is merely confi-

When this plan is fully digested, it shall be transmitted to him that he may have the satisfaction of going beyond the expectation which he has raised, and that of his own accord, without solicitation. The King is perfectly satisfied that, whichever of the two modes shall be adopted for the Augmentation, it will be done in such a manner as not to indispose the authors of the rejected one.—Arlington Street. Relative to the gang of villains near Halifax, who for some years past have made a practice of diminishing the coin, and of late years of coining Portugal pieces. The practice had become so common that it put the merchants under great difficulties with regard to their payments. Prosecutions were set on foot last summer, and by the activity of Mr. Deighton, supervisor of Excise, seven or eight of the gang have been taken and committed to York Castle; and others of the gang, in revenge, waylaid Mr. Deighton on the 9th inst. and shot him dead near his own house. A reward of 100*l.*, and a pardon to all except the principal offenders, have been advertised for the discovery of the murderers. Recommends the matter to his Lordship for such steps to be taken as will restore security to that part of the country, where some of the inhabitants are so much alarmed that they talk of being obliged to leave it.

1344. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND to LORD WEYMOUTH.

Immediately on receipt of his letter of the 1st inst. he convened the Primate, Chancellor, Lord Annaly, the Prime Serjeant, the Attorney and Solicitor General, Mr. Malone, and the Provost, who, upon considering the two modes and the present circumstances of affairs, unanimously agreed that the plan proposed by the Prime Serjeant ought to be adopted. To this they were induced by a very extraordinary transaction which passed two days before in the House of Commons, where Mr. Pery moved that it should be an instruction to the Committee of Supply to take into consideration what number of forces are necessary to be maintained within this kingdom for its defence. Mr. Attorney and Mr. Solicitor General, the Prime Serjeant, Mr. Malone, and the Provost opposed the motion strongly and ably; but the Speaker and Lord Shannon, joining their numbers to those who are always in opposition, beat "us" by a majority of thirty, both on the question of adjournment and the main question. Another inducement for preferring the Prime Serjeant's plan was the word insurrection in the sign manual, as infinite pains had been taken heretofore to persuade mankind that the real object of this measure was against the Americans; so it was not doubted but that the most malignant interpretation would be applied to that word at this instant, to the great prejudice of the measure, both in the debate and in the seditious writings that abound no less in Ireland than in England. The House, by means of Mr. Pery's motion, being already in possession of the matter, the Prime Serjeant's plan was preferred, as, had his Excellency sent the King's message, they could not prevent its being followed by an Act of Parliament, which was thought less disrespectful in such case than in that of the Lord Lieutenant's message.

When this point was settled, he sent for Lord Shannon and the Speaker, and communicated to them this plan, and desired their support. Neither of them thought proper to give any answer at that time; and though this is the fourth day, they have made no declaration of their intentions. During this suspense thought it highly necessary to summon that larger meeting of the King's servants usually consulted before the communication of a matter of such importance, that the friends of Government might not apprehend that it turned upon the decision of Lord Shannon and Mr. Ponsonby alone. They were present, but did not intimate their intentions. Will not pretend to conjecture why they are so long collecting the opinions of a set of gentlemen whom they can at other times call to a question in ten minutes, as it might be very little to their honour in point of decency, propriety, or good disposition. The Duke of Leinster, on Sir George Macartney being sent to him to ask his assistance upon the present plan, expressed his disapprobation of any augmentation whatsoever at this time in pretty plain terms, and two days after sent his son to Sir George Macartney to say that he continued unalterable in his sentiments on that head.

Thus matters stand at present with regard to those powers. As to the measure itself, has no doubt of being able to carry it through, though every attempt will be made to render it as little as possible the gracious act of the Crown, and as much as possible to mark the power of a prevailing party. During the course of this business he will have great reliance on the abilities and services of the persons mentioned in the first part of his letter. Proposes to send his message on Thursday next.

P.S.—Since writing the above the Speaker and Lord Shannon called on him while he was abroad, with a plan of their own for the Augmentation. Will see them to-morrow, and endeavour to do the best for the King's service.—Dublin Castle. "Private."

1347. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to the SAME.

Gives a detailed account of the circumstances of the dissolution of the last Parliament of Ireland, and the meeting of the new one, and of the two Bills transmitted to England as the causes for calling the new Parliament, viz., the Qualification Bill and a short Money Bill. The former was read the first day of the Session in both Houses without opposition; but the short Money Bill, on account of a resolution of the House precluding a Money Bill from being read until the report from the Committee of Accounts was received by the House, was not read until this day, when, upon a motion for its being read a second time to-morrow morning, it passed in the negative, 87 to 68. A motion then was made that the Bill should be totally rejected, which, after a long debate, was carried in the affirmative, 94 to 71. And the opposition, not contented with this victory, resolved that the said Bill is rejected because it did not take its rise in the House of Commons, as will be seen by the enclosed extract of the minutes. These extraordinary proceedings are not to be paralleled in the history of this country from the year 1496, the era of Poyning's Law, down to the present time, except in 1692 under the Government of Lord Sydney, when the House of Commons determined the same question exactly in the same manner. Their conduct at that time was judged so unwarrantable, and so contrary to that constitutional dependence in which Ireland then stood and still stands to England, that three days after their rejection of the short Money Bill, he (Lord Sydney) prorogued them for six months.

Encloses a copy of the whole transaction taken from the journals of the time, with a copy of the protest on the occasion, and an extract from the opinion of all the judges in this kingdom to whom the consideration of that point was referred. Lord Sydney prorogued them on his own authority and without waiting for orders from the other side. His conduct was approved, and the same Parliament was never suffered to reassemble. Wishing to do nothing without the most mature deliberation and the most explicit directions, he would not venture in the present circumstances of the time to adopt upon the instant Lord Sydney's conduct. Thought it best to take no public notice of it, but to let the proceedings of Parliament go on in their usual course, and immediately to transmit a narrative of the fact and await His Majesty's commands. The Duke of Leinster, Lord Shannon, and the Speaker, who all supported Government upon this question in 1761, by a majority of 147 to 37, deserted it on the present occasion, and unanimously concurred to defeat the measure. To-morrow the Committee of Supply meet, and will probably grant the usual supply, subject, however, to the Parliamentary grants as usual, which absorb a very large part of it. The Augmentation will probably be provided for in the new Loan Bill which they will substitute for that just now rejected.

Cannot presume to advise His Majesty whether to prorogue, dissolve, or continue this Parliament. Their conduct hitherto has pretty well unmasked their real sentiments, and shown they mean to acknowledge as little as possible the superiority of the mother country. In case of a prorogation or dissolution, should imagine that a thorough reform should be made in most of the offices in this kingdom, and that the true friends of Government, whose capacity and integrity he has experienced, should be brought into His Majesty's service according to a plan which he will transmit as soon as he knows the King's sentiments upon the proceedings of this day. The Duke of Leinster has declared his hostility to everything either coming from or connected with the present Administration in England. Does not see how English Government can ever with any degree of safety repose the least confidence in Lord Shannon and Mr. Ponsonby. On sending for them a few days since to consult them, as being in high office, relative to the restraining of the money grants, he received for answer that they begged to be excused from coming to the Castle because their attendance there had occasioned many reports which they thought very injurious to their reputation.

Thinks he may carry the Augmentation pretty nearly according to the Prime Serjeant's plan, yet has no explicit answer or promise of support in that measure either from Lord Shannon or the Speaker, although he communicated it to them as early as possible and called on them for their assistance. Such conduct as theirs he would despise as a private man, but when marked towards His Majesty's representative it becomes an object of serious consideration. The constant plan of these men of power is to possess the Government of this country, and to lower the authority of English Government, which must in the end destroy that dependence which this kingdom has on Great Britain.

P.S.—At this time there are several committees sitting who have come to very intemperate resolutions relative to pensions and other matters which are not yet reported to the House. Ought also to mention that "we" had the most hearty assistance in this great constitutional question from Mr. Malone, the Prime Serjeant, Attorney and Solicitor General, and the Provost; but from the number of elections pending, and the non-attendance of some of its friends, Government has not yet had an opportunity of exerting its full strength.—Dublin Castle. Thought it extremely necessary that his "secret" of last night should be followed by Mr. Allen, a member of Parliament here, a man of great knowledge of the state of the revenue of this kingdom, in whom great confidence may be placed. He is capable of giving very satisfactory information of the extent as well as abuses of the finances of this kingdom, from whence a judgment may be formed how far the circumstances of this kingdom will enable His Majesty to support the necessary civil and military establishment in case he shall judge proper to prorogue or dissolve Parliament.

Expresses the warm sense with which he received his, Lord Weymouth's, most friendly communication in his last private letter of His Majesty's intentions upon the Augmentation, and his Lordship's own good wishes for his Excellency's success.

Would be happy if he were able to give more ample assurances of a prosperous issue to that important business; but, however convinced the general sense of mankind here appears of the necessity of the measure, and at the same time penetrated with His Majesty's gracious condescension, yet against the powers of Mr. Ponsonby and Lord Shannon and the terrors of their dominion his Excellency will undertake to answer for no event, although he thinks that upon such ground they cannot carry a majority against Government, and they therefore will not contend it.

Ireland,
v. 436, No. 53.1351. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to LORD WEYMOUTH.

May look upon the measure of the Augmentation as now secure after the carrying of the three resolutions relative to it in the Committee of Supply. Though Lord Shannon and Mr. Ponsonby are supposed to have supported and did indeed by many of their friends support this question, yet they either did not or could not bring the same number to assist Government on this occasion that they had brought to oppose it on every other during this Session. Mr. Longfield, one of Lord Shannon's members, spoke violently and voted against the Augmentation, and all Lord Loftus's friends, who are nearly related to Mr. Ponsonby and hitherto considered as under his influence, opposed it with their whole strength, as did the Duke of Leinster's following. This measure, founded on the security of an Irish Act of Parliament, as well as His Majesty's gracious condescension, became so popular that Lord Shannon and Mr. Ponsonby did not dare openly to go against it, and therefore, though they gave his Excellency no assurances on that head, made a merit with the public and supported in some measure what they had not in their power to defeat.

A militia scheme for 5,000 men has been proposed in Parliament here. It will cost the public about 20,000*l.* in the two years. Government not opposing this measure had the good effect of bringing the country gentlemen to its assistance in restraining the money grants, which this day in Committee have been brought down to 60,000*l.*,—a point of the utmost consequence, as that article in last Session amounted to 120,000*l.*, and if not defeated would have arisen to twice that sum in this Session, to judge by the petitions.

If His Majesty think fit, so soon as such Money Bills as shall be approved are returned here and passed, to prorogue the Parliament, and to remove the gentlemen who have so ill answered the trust and confidence which the English Government hath reposed in them, and to put others more able and attached in their room, has no doubt but that before the next Session everything may be so settled that H.M.'s Government will be quiet and easy for the future. Must say that the rejection of the Money Bill on Tuesday last by the first servants of the Crown is a most serious consideration and calls for some signal mark of His Majesty's disapprobation.—Dublin Castle.

Relative to a memorial and other papers in the matter of the expenses incurred by the East India Company in the expedition to Manilla in 1762, several of the articles of which the Lords of the Treasury conceive great doubts about, as to whether they ought to be made good to the Company by the public. No matters of account between their Lordships and the East India Company having ever been communicated to him, it is impossible for him to state this matter to the King with the necessary precision. Returns, therefore, the papers to their Board, where this business has hitherto been transacted, and where alone it can be brought into that form in which it may be proper to lay it before the King.

Asks for his patronage to Col. Fraser, his Excellency's first aide-de-camp here, who has served with no small reputation on several occasions in the late war. Col. Gisbourne, the present Quarter Master General in Ireland, has greatly declined in his health, and there is little probability that he will be able to take the field on any emergency. He is otherwise a good officer, well acquainted with this country, and a man of very considerable abilities in Parliament, and a most able speaker, wherein he has done the Crown no small service. The office of Quarter Master General, like several others of the first importance in this kingdom, has, through the influence of party and the former distress of H.M.'s affairs here, unhappily become an object of sale, and it is indeed highly necessary that it should be redeemed from this situation, as well as those of First Engineer and Judge Advocate General, upon which he will trouble his Lordship another day. If His Majesty would bestow Fort William on Col. Gisbourne, and appoint Col. Fraser, who will make up the difference to the former, to succeed here as Quarter Master General, this office will be executed by one who will pursue his service independent of all private interests and party jobs.—Dublin Castle. 4 17.

1356. PLACE OF EXECUTION.

Entries of documents relative to the place of execution of the two cutters, D'Oyle and Valline, who were sentenced to death. It being thought advisable that they should be executed in Spitalfields, where the outrages had been committed, the Attorney General's opinion was asked whether, since there had been no order of the Court before which they were tried for their execution in an unusual place, as in the case of the coalheavers, such an order could be afterwards made, and if it could, in what manner. He replied that the Recorder of London might, by his warrant, direct that the execution should take place in Spitalfields, and that His Majesty might, by his sign manual, signify his pleasure to the Recorder for this purpose. A warrant was accordingly sent, but the Sheriffs of Middlesex, Messrs. Townsend and Sawbridge, on receiving the Recorder's order, petitioned His Majesty to respite the execution, in order that their doubts, whether they ought not to look to the sentence of the Court for their warrant and not to the Recorder, should be settled. It was, therefore, respited for a week, and the Sheriffs were directed to submit to His Majesty the opinions on which their doubts had arisen. The Attorney General then a second time stated his opinion that the sentence of the Court not specifying the time and place of execution, they were left to be ascertained by the warrant of the Recorder.

As requested, the Sheriffs transmitted a statement of the reasons on which their doubts were founded, and the opinion of Serjeant Glynn, with the case which they had submitted to him, and requested either that the sentence of the Court should be executed at the usual place, or that for any variation they might have the sanction of the Judges. These papers were sent to the Attorney and Solicitor General for their consideration, with directions to report as to the proper mode of laying the matter before the Judges, and to draw up such a state of the case as they should think necessary in order to have the Judges' opinion. They accordingly transmitted a case to be laid before the Judges through the hands and by the intervention of the Lord Chancellor. This was done; and the opinion of the Judges was that the time and place of execution were in law no part of the judgment, and that the Recorder's warrant was a lawful authority to the Sheriffs as to the time and place of executing the two convicts. The Lord Chancellor transmitting this opinion, informed Lord Weymouth that the next regular step to take would be to take the King's pleasure whether he would respite the execution any further; if he did not, it would then take place when the respite was expired. Lord Camden also enclosed a letter to himself, received from the Sheriffs, in which they objected both to the case and the question as submitted to the Judges. He said that he did not see much weight in their objections, but suggested, nevertheless, the propriety of submitting the letter to the Attorney General.

The King's pleasure being taken as to any further respite of the execution, his answer was given in the negative; and the Lord Chancellor, the Recorder, and the Sheriff of Middlesex were informed of the result. The Lord Chancellor, in his reply to Lord Weymouth, expressed a wish that a copy of the Judges' opinion had been sent as he desired to the Sheriffs, as he had promised that if they were dissatisfied with that opinion and would state their own case, it should be considered, if it appeared that there was any material defect in the case before stated. He said he was afraid that they would complain that they had had no opportunity of stating their objections, the King's pleasure having been taken before they had seen the opinion. But he mentioned this only as a breach, perhaps, in point of decorum, being clearly of opinion that no further case ought to be put to the Judges, as he would be ready to declare whenever called upon. He advised, however, that when the King's pleasure was signified to the Sheriffs it should be accompanied with a copy of the opinion, and information where they might inspect the original.

"The letters which passed between the Lord Chancellor and the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, and between the Sheriffs and the Secretary of State," relative to this affair, are to be found at length in the Appendix to the Chronicle of the Annual Register for 1769, p. 181. 1357. LORD WEYMOUTH to the LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND.

Ireland,
 v. 436, No. 51.

As to that part of his Excellency's most secret letter of the 21st, which stated that the Money Bill is rejected because it did not take its rise in the House of Commons, it was too weighty for him to venture to advise the King. His Excellency's letter being therefore communicated to such of his servants as His Majesty thought proper to consult, they are unanimously of opinion that His Majesty should direct his Excellency to prorogue the Parliament for two or three months, and that he (Lord Townshend) should enter his protest as Lord Sydney did in 1692, following his example as far as the two cases agree. The only consideration therefore for which his Excellency is at liberty to postpone the prorogation is in case that the circumstances of Ireland should not be such as to enable His Majesty to support the necessary civil and military establishments by any management which his Excellency (who is the only competent judge of this matter) can devise and think practicable. Asks him to communicate immediately the steps taken on this despatch, and to send the plan which he said he had to submit in case of the prorogation or dissolution of the Parliament. A draft. 3 pp.

1361. RIOTS IN JERSEY.

A series of letters, &c. relative to the riots in the Island of Jersey on the 28th September, on which day (7 b) a large body of people from the neighbouring parishes assembled at the town of St. Helier, some of whom afterwards declared that they had able heads to aid them, and, being armed with clubs or bludgeons, entered H.M.'s Court House when the Lieut. Governor (Col. Thomas Ball), the Lieut. Bailly (Mr. Charles Lempriere), and Jurats, with others H.M.'s officers, were proceeding to open the Chief Pleas of the King's Court of Heritage, and telling them that as the mob ruled in England they would also govern in the Island, extorted from them by threats of violence several most extraordinary Acts, highly derogatory to His Majesty's royal authority, and tending to the annihilation of part of the King's rights and revenues in the Island, as was done by the rioters in 1730. These Acts the rioters forced the Lieutenant Governor and the Lieutenant Bailly and Jurats with the King's Procureur to sign and cause to be published. They also obliged them to release a prisoner who had been committed for a contemptuous and threatening behaviour towards the Deputy Viscount in the execution of his office in regard to the examination of the public weights and measures; and after they had compelled them to grant an Act to repeal the King's Order in Council, by which Mr. Nicolas Fiot had been condemned to make his submission to the Royal Court in Jersey and to clear his contempt, they further proposed that this Fiot should be made constable of the town parish, and that Mr. John Durell, who was then constable, should be elected a Jurat; but "no Act was made of this last demand." After having been kept confined in the Court House for near five hours in continual apprehension of falling a sacrifice to the fury of the enraged multitude, a number of them having gone out in the market place to hear the publication of the Acts they had extorted, they (the Lieut. Governor, &c.) at last found means to retire, though with much difficulty, a great part of the rioters still remaining to obstruct their passage, keeping the doors shut, insulting them, and even offering to lay violent hands on some of them. The rioters continued to assemble, and to disperse anonymous and threatening papers, and to threaten new demands. Such of the magistrates as usually resided in the country, together with the Deputy Viscount, took refuge in H.M.'s castle Elizabeth, apprehending they were in danger of being dragged by the populace from their several habitations to the Court House, and considering the small number of the troops in the Island (about 200 feeble invalids, 7 g) and the large number of the rioters (though the last were greatly inferior to the better sort of well-disposed persons who were awed by them). There they waited for a fair wind to embark for England as requested by the States, in order to lay the state of affairs before His Majesty in Council, and to give Lord Albemarle, the Governor-in-Chief, more particular information. Copies of the Acts which the rioters extorted, &c. (7 c and d) are among the papers. Col.

Ball applied to Lord Barrington (7 f) for 200 regular troops, as (7 g) it was not thought prudent to raise the militia, the rioters composing a part of it, and being consequently possessed of fire-arms, and flattering themselves that they would be joined by some of the Newfoundland sailors, who were daily expected home to the number of 1,200 or 1,500 men.

In a letter of the 9th Oct. (7 e), Mr. Charles Lempriere, on account of the injurious insinuations made in the public newspapers in England against the Royal jurisdiction of Jersey in regard to their proceedings touching the exportation of corn out of the Island, explains to Lord Albemarle that the States of the Island, considering the great quantity of corn there was there, and in order to encourage agriculture as the only means of preventing a scarcity, permitted, by their Act of the 29th of August, the exportation of corn from the Island, free importation from all parts being at the same time allowed; but that the Act had not, when Mr. Lempriere wrote, been carried into execution by the usual and regular publications. He further relates the circumstances of a riot which occurred on account of a baker, who had a quantity of old wheat unsold which he had bought from the King's receiver, attempting to ship it in a vessel at the pier of St. Helier. It was firmly believed that at the time the riot happened there was in the Island a sufficient quantity of corn to sustain the inhabitants for a whole year at the least, besides the liberty of a free importation from all parts. In 1765 a great quantity of corn was permitted to be daily imported from France into the Island and sold, the wheat at about 3*s.* 4*d.* per bushel Winchester measure, and the barley at 1*s.* 8*d.* per bushel; when the King's Receiver, finding it difficult to dispose of the King's wheat remaining upon his hands, (which was of the best quality, and in which consisted the principal part of the Governor's revenue,) attempted to export a quantity to England; but the then Commander-in-chief took upon himself, without the knowledge or privity of the civil magistrate, and by his own authority, to stop the vessel on board of which the corn had been laden, and issued his orders forbidding the exportation of corn out of the Island, doing this upon the complaint of some of the inhabitants of St. Helier. Further, though it had been expressly provided by an Act of the States of the Island in 1697 that no corn should be imported whilst the price of wheat did not exceed 30 sols the half bushel, and the other corn in proportion, and notwithstanding the great disadvantages agriculture was reduced to by the great number of hands yearly employed in the Newfoundland fishery, yet the Royal Court had not thought proper to forbid the importation of corn, nor did the Receiver of the King's revenue demand it in 1765, when corn was sold under the price fixed by the said Act of the States forbidding the importation.

By the 18th Oct. Mr. Charles Lempriere and two of the Jurats (Messrs. Le Hardy and Pipon, 7 ee) had arrived in England (7 e); and, in consequence of their representations, five companies of the Royals (7 y) were finally embarked at Southampton under the command of Col. Bentinck (7 hh), and arrived in Jersey, part on the 13th of Nov., and part a few days later (7 ii), Mr. Lempriere having preceded them (7 hh). Previously, however, the latter had stated (7 n) for himself and the other magistrates that they could not think of resuming their functions before effectual measures had been taken for their future security, for the better preservation of the public peace of the Island, and for the support of His Majesty's authority. He also intimated a desire that their conduct should be enquired into, they being accountable to His Majesty and the Lords of the Privy Council for their proceedings, as the extravagant attack made upon them by the "intoxicated and deluded populace" might be considered as the consequence of the clamorous and factious proceedings carried on and encouraged for some time past against the King's civil jurisdiction in Jersey, and of their having been stigmatised in the public papers in England as tyrants and oppressors. On the 24th Oct. His Majesty's pleasure was signified to Mr. Lempriere (7 y) that he should return to Jersey to resume the functions of his office under the military protection granted at his and the Lieutenant Governor's request, and take the proper method of making such declaration as His Majesty in Council should make for annulling and erasing the Acts extorted, and then proceed to an enquiry into the authors and grounds of the disturbances, declaring at the same time his readiness to receive and transmit for His Majesty's information all petitions and complaints with regard to supposed grievances, which should be properly and legally presented. At the same time, Mr. Lempriere was informed that the King was satisfied with his conduct, and with that of Lieutenant Governor Ball. Before leaving England, on the 2nd Nov. (7 ee) the Lieut. Bailly requested Lord Weymouth's interposition in order that the two Jurats, Messrs. Le Hardy and Pipon, who served that office at their own expense, might have the charges of their voyage to England defrayed. In the same letter he intimates that it would tend to the King's service, and to the preservation of the public peace in Jersey, "that persons of a factious disposition should not be "appointed to fill up vacant places in the Royal Court, and contrary "to the approbation of the person who executed the office of Chief "Magistrate." The Governor-in-chief, Lord Albemarle, offered (7 s) to go himself over to Jersey, but was informed by Lord Weymouth (7 w) that the King dispensed with that attendance, being of opinion that the force sent would be sufficient to restore legal authority.

Among these papers is one unsigned, but dated Jersey, 30 Oct. 1769, (7 dd) headed, "Quæres for your Lordship's information." It charges the Lieutenant Bailly and his brother with exporting corn for the five years past, knowing the Island did not produce a sufficiency for more than six or eight months at most, and of holding back the corn from market; whereby, as well as from the exportation and monopoly of the bakers, the corn rents (yearly determined by the market price) had risen to an exorbitant price. The writer also asks why the corn of the King or Governor's revenue (which was by far the greatest part of the produce of the Island) was not brought to market, but sold to the bakers at an advanced price, by which means the assize of bread was either out of the reach of the poor, or the bread so bad as to afford no nourishment? and why the assize of bread had been totally neglected for many years? and further why an Act was made some weeks before to enable the bakers to export the remaining corn which they had thus monopolized, notwithstanding that the inhabitants of the town were distressed, not knowing where to get corn; and the baker who supplied the garrison obliged to have recourse to France and England in consequence of a royal permission to import, the King's Receiver having refused to sell him corn? and why this baker (an Englishman) was refused a licence when Frenchmen were allowed to follow their trade without reserve? In this paper it is stated that the people on the 28th Sept., however desperate, were particularly attentive to the promise to hurt no man, which they had made the Lieutenant Governor in the morning, and that they retired out of town before it was dark without committing the least outrage: that they did not offer the least insult to the Lieutenant Bailly, who, with his wife behind him (en trousse), returned home that evening; or to the Procureur his brother, or to any of the Jurats, who also returned that evening to their respective houses in different parts of the Island, and there remained unmolested till the 1st of October, when the Lieutenant Bailly, the Procureur, and three Jurats were seized with a panic, and fled to the Castle for pretended security, but in fact to make the thing appear of greater consequence to the Government, and forward their demands: that it was certain that not the least insult had been offered to their houses or any part of their property, and that everything had been and remained quiet in the country. The price of provisions was considerably lowered since that day. His Lordship was also assured that any gentleman with proper authority from England, and versed in the language, would restore everything to proper order without troops, or any expense to Government.

[Mr. Lempriere's account of the spirit of the people would appear to be different.] On the 2nd Nov. from Southampton (7 ee) he wrote that he had received information from Jersey that some of the rioters continued to threaten the under-farmers of the King's revenues. On his arrival in Jersey he says (7 hh) he found that it had been given out that no prosecutions were to be carried on against the persons concerned in the riot, and that none of the principal ones were to be apprehended and committed to prison, but that the magistrates had only directions to take voluntary informations, and transmit the same. He could not tell what effect this report might have had, but the spirit of disobedience and resistance to H.M.'s civil government in the Island, infused in numbers of the lower class by persons who had clamoured against the Royal jurisdiction, was not extinguished; but, on the contrary, some of the rioters continued to show a mutinous disposition, and threatened that if the Acts extorted were repealed, they would pay a visit to the houses of the magistrates, especially of those who had gone to England to make representations. He says that they might be at a loss how to proceed in case of any fresh assaults, as, by the Order in Council directing them to take voluntary informations upon oath in regard to the rioters (none of whom were ordered to be apprehended), the powers vested in the jurisdiction of the Island for apprehending and punishing all offenders, except in cases reserved to the Royal cognizance, seemed to be suspended. He expressed the fear that as the common people were addicted to drunkenness, from the great plenty and cheapness of liquors, and were very ignorant of religion, it would be difficult to bring them to a due sense of their duty to Government, which had been declining in Jersey since the riot in 1730, when no exemplary punishments were made of any of the persons concerned.

After the arrival of the troops (7 ii) a meeting of the Royal Court was held, when the Orders in Council on the occasion of the riots were directed to be registered and published. The States were also assembled, and the necessary orders given, in the presence of Col. Bentinck, for settling the troops in proper barracks. The magistrates declined apprehending and committing the known chief actors amongst the rioters until further orders, notwithstanding a clause in the charter of their privileges granted in the reign of Henry VII. Mr. Lempriere represented the necessity of enacting proper laws to deter daring persons from attacking, at the secret instigation of others, the King's Ministers of Justice in the Island, who were far from being in a state of absolute security, from the continuance of the threats against them, from the mutinous disposition continuing to subsist, and from a reigning spirit of disobedience and resistance to the King's civil government among some of the inhabitants. Mr. Lempriere attributes the interruption of the peace and tranquillity which the Island enjoyed for 15 years while he acted as Lieutenant Bailly under the late Earl Granville to the infusion, by some factious and jealous persons, of a spirit of disrespect in some of the lower class towards their superiors, notwithstanding that none of the inhabitants had had any just cause of complaint, either from oppression or for the want of the most impartial justice. During the length of time he had officiated as Chief Magistrate, three or four sentences only of the Royal Court had been reversed upon appeals to the King in Council. He speaks highly of the zeal and abilities of Col. Bentinck.

The last letter among these papers is dated the 3rd Dec., at which time the orders made by the States of the Island for quieting the inhabitants had not had the desired effect; but, on the contrary, greater confusion had ensued, and the spirit of disobedience seemed rather to have increased from the insinuations made by the "enemies to the public peace" that these orders had proceeded from fear. The rioters were under great consternation on the return of the magistrates from England, from the apprehension that orders had been brought for their seizure and committal to prison. But this not being the case, they continued their nocturnal and tumultuous assemblies and threatening proceedings, while forcing persons to sign petitions. The publication of H.M.'s Orders in Council had not induced the inhabitants to return to a sense of their duty, and it was apprehended that the threats given out would prevent persons from making voluntary affidavits, notwithstanding the offer of a reward. Col. Bentinck continued with indefatigable attention to exert his zealous endeavours to promote the King's service, and to support the authority of the King's jurisdiction; and the arduous task in that respect lay chiefly upon him. The militia was called out at his request, and he purposed to deliver to them a spirited speech suitable to the circumstances of the times. In consequence of the threats given out against him and the other gentlemen who went to England, the Lieutenant Bailly was obliged to leave his usual place of residence upon his estate in the country after having for 19 years supported with great trouble and expense the King's authority, and promoted his interest and the welfare of his subjects in various ways.

1367. SIR GEORGE MACARTNEY to Mr. ———.

Encloses, in order to be laid before Lord Weymouth, two representations from Mr. Ponsonby and the other Commissioners of the Revenue, relative to the gauging of the beer and ale barrels, received by the Lord Lieutenant since signing his private letter of yesterday's date.—Dublin Castle.

The enclosures, consisting of two letters from Sir George Macartney referring the matter of the gauging of the ale barrel to the Commissioners of Revenue ; their replies of the 4th and 6th Dec. respectively ; and the representation from Mr. Ponsonby.
 The Commissioners state their inability to form an opinion as to the consequences of the experiment. Mr. Ponsonby, after entering into the question of law, says that, considering the question in a prudential light, it would be advisable to try the experiment of reducing the ale gallon to 217 cubic inches. By the accounts of the excise on beer and ale, the brewery appears to be in a state of gradual decay ; one cause of which is that the duties on a barrel of corn brewed into ale, are nearly double the duties on the same quantity distilled into whiskey. This, with the frauds in the distillery, gives such an advantage and encouragement to that trade as threaten the brewery with ruin. The malt liquor of the town is scarcely drinkable, and some effort seems to be necessary to recover
 it. A rivalry between persons of the same trade always subsists ; and if the brewers improve their beer or ale, it will greatly increase the consumption ; for it is notorious that in the county of Wexford, and other counties where the beer is of a good quality, no other liquor is drunk by the commonalty. Should success attend this experiment so as to diminish the consumption of whiskey, the advantage in the health, morals, and industry of the people would fully compensate to the nation for a loss upon the revenue,— which, no doubt, would be made good some other way.

No. 66 a, b.

1368. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to LORD WEYMOUTH.

In reply to his despatch of the 30th past, relative to the rejected Money Bill. Since the receipt of it, his whole attention has been directed to procure the most exact information, whether by any management the necessary expenses of the civil and military establishments could be supported by the hereditary revenue alone. Has had several conversations with Mr. Clements, who this day delivered the enclosed paper containing the state of the hereditary revenue for one year, ending at Lady Day 1769, and the necessary unavoidable expenses of Government, as well as of the payments, which may be postponed even for such a length of time as two years (as once happened within Mr. Clements' memory); by all which it will be seen that in one year only there would be a deficiency of 34,514*l.* to discharge the necessary unavoidable demands of Government. It is possible that the deficiency would be supplied by the rise of the hereditary revenue; for as the duties are principally laid on articles of which the hereditary revenue consists, if the additional duties are taken off, it would not then be worth any man's while to smuggle, or brew or distil clandestinely, and the commodities discharged of those duties would, perhaps, become much cheaper, the consumption greatly increase, and the hereditary revenue rise very considerably. But this being eventual only, and not depending upon any management of his Excellency's, and as at the end of any given time there must remain a considerable sum unsatisfied, which will accumulate and increase, and which never can be paid out of the hereditary revenue as it now stands, he, the Lord Lieutenant, cannot take upon himself to say that the necessary expenses of H.M.'s civil and military establishments can be supported for the ensuing year without the additional duties. It appears by Mr. Clements' paper, that if these duties are not granted the debt of the kingdom will yearly increase by the sum of 261,174*l.*; and if the Parliament should not at their next meeting return to a sense of their duty, and discharge those arrears, his Excellency can suggest no method of clearing them unless very great reductions be made in the civil and military establishments, or that Great Britain shall take upon herself the payment of the outstanding debt. Whatever may be the increase in the hereditary revenue by the great influx of goods upon taking off the additional duties, it is not at all improbable that that circumstance may in the end operate very much to its detriment; for the merchants will import such great quantities of all sorts of merchandize as will stock the market, and consequently reduce to the lowest ebb the revenue arising to the Crown upon imports for many years to come. In the exercise of his discretion his Excellency will therefore postpone the prorogation of the Parliament until hearing further from him, Lord Weymouth; but will, the beginning of next week, go to the House of Lords, and make a speech to both Houses, and enter his protest, pursuant to His Majesty's commands, following the example of Lord Sydney, as far as the two cases agree.

If His Majesty rejects or passes the usual Bill of Supply and the Loan Bills which have been transmitted, then will be the time, in his Excellency's opinion, for the prorogation. And though it may happen that in the interval between the protest and the prorogation the intemperance and ill humour of the House of Commons may break out into all manner of excesses, he will, with the utmost readiness and pleasure, obey His Majesty's commands without regarding any personalities aimed at himself in the execution of his duty.—Dublin Castle. 1371. LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND (TOWNSHEND) to LORD WEYMOUTH.

His intention was to have gone to Parliament to-morrow, and entered his protest; but as he thought he could not conceal the step he was about to take from His Majesty's servants here, whom he has constantly consulted, he convened them together this morning at the Castle, and informed them of it. They expressed the greatest concern at the situation which the proceedings of the 21st of last month had flung H.M.'s affairs and this country into, and the unhappy event that had brought it on, and earnestly represented that if it were His Majesty's fixed resolution that his Excellency should enter his protest against that vote, it ought immediately to be followed by a prorogation; for that if there should be any interval between the protest and the prorogation, and the House of Commons should be suffered to meet again before they were prorogued, their ill-humour would break out into all manner of excesses in vindication of their own measure, and other matters perhaps equally detrimental to the public service. Upon his asking whether this intemperance might not be prevented by his sending them a message by his Secretary, immediately after making his speech, to adjourn for ten days or a fortnight, they all declared it to be their opinion that the House would not adjourn until they had gratified their resentment to the utmost, as they would conclude the protest to be the forerunner of a dissolution, and that his Excellency would probably be soon compelled to prorogue it by proclamation after the mischief was done.

Much was urged by these gentlemen concerning the insufficiency of the hereditary revenue to support the expenses of Government, and of the great distresses which would arise if payments from the Treasury should not be made as punctually as usual. They were all unwilling that the hereditary revenue should be thought sufficient, and therefore said everything that could prevent the experiment being tried.

For these reasons, and the representations they have signed, which he entreats may be laid before the King, he has ventured to defer for the present entering his protest. Nothing should induce him to presume one moment to hesitate upon his orders, but a prospect of taking with him the opinion and support of the ablest and best subjects His Majesty has in the kingdom,—men whose services have been experienced at the most critical times under his predecessors, and also during his own endeavours against H.M.'s other more powerful servants in opposition.

Transmits, for correction, the speech and protest which the Chancellor drew up for him, and which he intended to have made.

P.S.—The Lord Chancellor also requested him to postpone the protest, but desired leave to offer his reasons in a separate paper, which shall be sent by to-morrow's post. Enclosed is a copy of the paper which his Excellency read to the King's servants in the morning.—Dublin Castle. "Most secret."

Sends a paper delivered by the Lord Chancellor, containing his reasons for concurring with the other servants of the Crown in requesting and advising his Excellency to postpone his protest.—Dublin Castle.

The enclosure. His Lordship assigns eight reasons, which summarily amount to these:—that the Lord Lieutenant would be acting according to the true spirit of his instructions in delaying to make his protest until he should also be able to prorogue; that this delay would probably only be for a few days, and that if the protest were entered, as first proposed, it would be followed by proceedings which would necessitate a hasty prorogation, or would occasion the loss of the Money Bills; that the precedent of Lord Sydney warranted a delay, which would not diminish the effect of the protest; and that if the two Money Bills should not be saved, His Majesty as to the protest would be under no worse circumstances, but possibly in better, as, if the Commons should reject one or both of the Money Bills, they might possibly be considered as the persons responsible, and not His Majesty or his Chief Governor or other servants. 4¾ pp.

Dom. Geo. III.,
pel. 81,
No. 22 a to m.1382. DISTURBANCES AMONG THE WEAVERS IN SPITALFIELDS.

Letters and papers relative to the proceedings of the "dreadful banditti, called cutters of the looms, in Spitalfields" (23a), and the steps taken by the magistrates and others for the suppression of the disturbances, &c.

On the 28th Sept. Sir John Fielding informed Mr. Wood (22a) that they had obtained the long wished-for information on oath against the cutters, and that three of them were in custody with positive evidence against them, and the parties bound over to prosecute. But the manufacturers, prosecutors, and witnesses being so terrified that he thought they deserved public protection, and the offence being a public one, he advised that the prosecutions should be carried on at the public expense, a reward offered by Government, and two companies of the Guards quartered in the public-houses in Spitalfields. The Treasury undertook the prosecution (22 c), and offered a reward in the Gazette.

For the future prevention of these outrages, Sir John stated his opinion (22 a) that an Act of Parliament, giving a clearer authority to the magistrates to settle the wages between these manufacturers and their journeymen, would alone suffice. He thought they were already empowered by law to do it, and related how that, in order to bring it to bear, he had got the masters and journeymen mutually to settle the prices of their respective works, which they brought in a book signed and agreed to, and then had recommended them mutually to petition the session at Hicks's Hall to establish by law the prices so agreed to; but how that, the magistrates there differing in opinion as to the Act of Parliament, this matter had been unfortunately defeated.

On Saturday afternoon, the 30th September, a paper was brought to the magistrates at Bow Street by a manufacturer (22 g), containing a demand from "the Conquering and Bold Defiance" of 4s. per loom, to be paid that evening at the Dolphin, in Spitalfields; upon which the landlord was summoned to appear at Bow Street. This he neglected to do, and information having been received about 8 o'clock that the "cutters" were at the Dolphin to receive contributions, a warrant was granted by Mr. Kelynge and Mr. Wright (22 f) to search the house, and attempted to be put into execution by Mr. Wright and a party of constables and soldiers. The "cutters" (22 g) fired on the peace officers, and killed a soldier at the foot of the stairs, and afterwards fired promiscuously out of the windows and down the stairs upon the soldiers, who, under the direction of the civil power, fired at them. But the arms of the soldiers were not loaded, nor ordered to be loaded, till the "cutters" had fired several times upon the peace officers, and upon the magistrate himself, who was on the stairs desiring them to surrender. Most of the "cutters" made their escape, but four were taken, upon one of whom several papers were found. Upon this (22 f), Sir John Fielding recommended the immediate quartering of troops in Spitalfields.

On the 14th Oct. (22 i), Sir Robert Darling was able to report that the riots and disturbances were gradually abating, in consequence of the steps taken by him and three brother magistrates of the division, viz., Messrs. Joseph Newsom, David Wilmot, and Burford Camper, who all exerted themselves in great danger, and with unwearied pains and diligence. These magistrates assembled the petty constables, and required the assistance of troops. Upon their recommendation Messrs. Chauvet and Co., and about 150 of the other master weavers, accommodated the officers at their expense with everything they wanted, and provided for each soldier, from the Three Tun Tavern, the value of ninepence a day in proper food. The magistrates sat up several nights, in order to put the law immediately into execution against the persons seized by the petty constables in the different houses of resort, and frequently went themselves to suspected houses, and found several persons concealed, whom they caused to be apprehended, though armed with swords, pistols, &c. They also summoned all the victuallers in and about Spitalfields to attend them on several days, and required from them all the information in their power, and forbad them, on pain of losing their licence and being prosecuted, to entertain any person or body of these men, and in case any such should assemble to give immediate notice. These steps were found, as stated above, to have answered in a great measure the salutary ends intended.

Messrs. Townshend and Sawbridge, the Sheriffs, being understood (22j) to be very active in stirring up an opinion that the troops were improperly sent to Spitalfields, upon Sir John Fielding's suggestion, a letter was written (dated 12 Oct.) to Sir Rt. Darling. Sir John afterwards met the Sheriffs by appointment (Bellas, and, he believed, Parson Horne, being present), and explained to them the whole of the Spitalfields affair; and Sir John's opinion being that the Sheriffs meant to make the public believe that the master weavers, under the protection of the troops, were oppressing the poor workmen, to guard against that, letters were written, by Lord Weymouth's direction, to Sir Rt. Darling and Mr. Chauvet. [There are no copies of these letters among this collection of papers.]

On the 30th Oct. Sir R. Darling reported from Mile End (22k) that the master weavers seemed quite disposed to pay the journeymen their full price, and that, to prevent complaints on either side, they had appointed a committee to hear all complaints, and settle any difference that might happen. Also that the inhabitants of that part of the town (even a great many of those who had before been attached to the Sheriffs' party) seemed well satisfied and thankful to Government for its interposition, and, instead of being dissatisfied, were very happy with the presence of the troops; while the conduct of the Sheriffs (who were greatly interposing on behalf of the two convicts) was considered by all sorts of people as totally inconsistent. The Sheriffs, or one of them, applied to each of the four magistrates separately, to discover their private sentiments, but always received for answer that, as the business was planned and executed by them jointly, they could not think themselves at liberty to have any private conversation singly with them. Mr. Sheriff Townshend applied to Mr. Newsom, but the magistrate was indisposed, and he went away seemingly not very well pleased.

Although things seemed quiet, Sir R. Darling recommended that the troops should be continued till His Majesty's pleasure was known with regard to the convicts.

broken into, and much damage done (22 m). His Majesty offered a reward of 50*l.* and a pardon to any accomplice on the conviction of the offenders. On the 18th Dec. (22 n), Sir John Fielding was able to send a most satisfactory account of the quiet state of the journeymen weavers.

Representing how necessary it is to displace Mr. Ponsonby from the head of the Revenue Board. Does not see how English Government in Ireland is likely ever to see a favourable issue to those important points upon which the maintenance of the authority of the Crown of Great Britain depends, whilst this gentleman holds his present power, and as he will, from the moment he expects a dissolution of this Parliament, canvass for the chair in a succeeding Sessions (as he did in the last for the present) with the whole power of his office, he should be immediately prevented. The friends likewise of Lord Lanesborough voted against the Money Bill, and in every interesting question during the last and present Session divided against Government, and are avowedly connected with Mr. Ponsonby's party. Lord Lanesborough and his friends have the highest obligation to the Crown; Mr. Champneys having been placed upon the establishment for 1,000*l.* per annum to open a seat for his Lordship at the Revenue Board. Would, therefore, in the room of Mr. Ponsonby and Lord Lanesborough, recommend John Beresford, Esq., and Sir William Osbourne, Bart. The first is a very respectable character in the kingdom, and brother to the Earl of Tyrone; the other, a very able member of Parliament and of good knowledge in revenue matters, and very capable of promoting an improvement of the revenue. To make the hereditary revenue and the additional duties produce what they ought, one or two members of the Board should be Englishmen, always resident in Ireland, regularly bred in the revenue of England, men of sense, spirit, and honour, if such could be prevailed upon to undertake an office of this kind; men in whom English Government could confide for discharging their duty themselves, for preventing others from abusing theirs, and for acting entirely in concert with H.M.'s Chief Governor. Room might easily be made for one or more such by negotiating with Lord Dungannon, Mr. Burke, or Mr. Boyle, or by giving pensions to Mr. Jones or Mr. Milbank.

Must recommend also that Lord Shannon be removed from the office of Master General of the Ordnance, and that Lord Drogheda, who well deserves it, should be appointed in his place. Would likewise recommend a change in the inferior boards, where several of the officers belonging to them have treated H.M.'s service very lightly and ungratefully, preferring the following of a party to the support of the King's Government. They can, therefore, well make room for such as stood in the breach at the most critical hour. Proposes, therefore, with His Majesty's approbation, to appoint Mr. Staples to be one of the Commissioners of the Barrack Board in the room of Lord Loftus, who received great favours from Government when he stood in need of them, and has attacked it with equal ingratitude and insolence since his better fortune. Mr. Staples is brother-in-law to Mr. Conolly, who has been from principle a most strenuous supporter of the Augmentation, and a firm friend to Government upon the most trying occasions. Mr. Langriche, another member of that Board as well as collector of Kilkenny, should be removed from both these offices, and his place at the Barrack Board conferred on Mr. Featherstone, a member of Parliament, well connected, who always supports Government. Mr. Magill, another Commissioner of this Board, who has made his fortune under Government, having, in the calculation transmitted by his Excellency, promised to come into Parliament, but disappointed him, should be succeeded by Mr. Gamble, a brother-in-law of the Provost's. It is a common trick in this kingdom for people, the moment they have obtained a good thing from Government through one Lord Lieutenant, to take the earliest occasion of quitting Parliament under his successor; by which means the intention of obliging them is defeated, and the influence of Government become as feeble as at this period. Mankind should be convinced that this is no longer to be the case. Must also recommend Charles Lambert, Esq., member of Parliament, and heir to a very considerable estate in Ireland, to be appointed Surveyor General of the Revenue of Leinster, in the room of Mr. Tattenham, who has been a constant opponent of Government. Henry Gore, Esq., brother of Lord Annaly, should succeed Mr. William Ponsonby, the Speaker's son, as Examiner of the Customs. Is persuaded that he need not repeat how much Lord Annaly deserves this mark of favour to his family. Mr. Francis Pierpoint Burton, member for the county of Clare, a very worthy man, who came over this Session to support Government at the hazard of his life, deserves some mark of favour; but being extremely infirm, and incapable of attending the duties of any office, his Excellency hopes His Majesty will grant him a pension of 500*l.* per annum on the civil establishment, either in his own name or in that of any friend whom he chooses to hold it in trust for him. Has the less regret in proposing pensions, because by the absentee tax and by deaths the country actually pays in pensions 8,000*l.* per annum less than it did when he came to the Government. Besides, in a few years a very considerable number of pensions will fall in. Has, in his official letter to the Lords of the Treasury, recommended that the pension of my Lord Meath, who has a very large fortune, and is, with his two sons and all his connexions, in strong opposition, as also that of Lady Loftus, wife of Lord Loftus, (the one of 500*l.* and the other of 200*l.* per annum,) should be discontinued.

Recommends the establishment of a Board of Accounts. The public accounts are now audited by the Chancellor and the Barons of the Exchequer. It would be more for the service of His Majesty and the revenue if they were audited by three commissioners particularly appointed for that purpose at a salary of 500*l.* per annum. This is little more than the present expense, which in the last two years amounted to near 2,000*l.* If the scheme is approved of, recommends Mr. Charles O'Hara, Mr. Thomas Allan, lately sent over to England, and "another person," who are all well skilled in matters of this kind, to be commissioners. Will send over in a few posts a draft of such a commission. It is a thing which has been long wanted and much desired here, has often been recommended by his predecessors, and will open a very favourable opportunity of attaching gentlemen of a very useful turn in Parliament.

Has long since represented that the principal share of the power and influence of those parties in Ireland which have so long embarrassed Government is owing to the favour as well as the forbearance of the Crown, under which they have been cherished; whilst, by a constant private understanding with those who are its declared opponents, they have uniformly distressed one Lord Lieutenant, and compromised with another : always gaining something for themselves, and paring away the authority and reputation of English government until it hath scarce any ground left to stand upon. His Majesty held out to them a second time the Augmentation as a test of their dutiful or factious conduct. But how have they since manifested their sense of His Majesty's gracious condescension upon that measure, and his paternal anxiety for the security of their country ? By a conduct which seemed on the point of involving his Government and the welfare of both kingdoms in the greatest distress. The management of the Chair, seconding the influence of the Revenue, has given them this advantage in the outset of the Sessions by compelling many members to observe a neutrality till they should see where the weight of Government would finally reside. Faction seems already to have made its utmost use of this circumstance, and the numbers seem to be declaring in favour of Government. The great powers are making every effort in election matters, with nearly equal numbers, even against individuals.

Thinks it his duty to advise His Majesty to make the changes recommended, and that they may be followed by the regulation of H.M.'s revenue as set forth in his most secret letter to the Duke of Grafton of the 21st of April last. If further information be necessary, could wish to send over a person fully capable of explaining the state of the revenue at large. Is the more earnest that this business be entered upon without delay, as it is evident that the military establishment as now augmented will induce additional expense, and new stations are absolutely necessary for the support of the revenue officers and civil magistrates in parts of the country which are in a very lawless situation. Even increase of pay to the soldier must be expected soon, from the enormous rise of land. On the other hand, so long as the hereditary revenue is kept down by such as have an interest therein, so long must the Crown be a suitor, even to its own servants, for the most necessary purposes of Government. These circumstances are well foreseen by those men, who propose to dictate to or bargain with Government upon every opportunity, as well as the duennial application for the Augmentation. The same cabal, the same demands, intrigue, and pretended patriotism, will revive. Government must begin from this moment to extricate itself from this dilemma, or submit.

Cannot omit mentioning again the abilities and zealous support of Mr. Tisdall, Mr. Prime Serjeant, Mr. Malone, the Provost, and the Solicitor General. It would greatly advantage the King's servants that some marks of His Majesty's favour should be bestowed on them. Has not yet heard from the Attorney General to what his views lead, as he chooses not to suggest any idea till the Session is over. But Mr. Prime Serjeant, whose talents in Parliament are indeed most singular, and whose services did so particularly facilitate the Augmentation, is desirous of leaving his profession of the law, at the head of which he has been long placed, and of being fixed in some department, where, by applying more of his time to public business, his uncommon abilities may be rendered more useful to Government. Can suggest no other expedient to secure so valuable an acquisition to Government than the addition of 1,000*l.* per annum, during pleasure, to the place of Alnager which he now holds. There are two seats vacant at the Council Board by death. And, presuming that His Majesty does not think it proper that persons who defeat a Money Bill because it did not take its rise in the House of Commons should hold their seats at it, would recommend, in the room of my Lord Shannon, Lord Lanesborough, Mr. Ponsonby, Sir William Mayne, Lord Lowth, Mr. Rowley, and Sir William Fownes, the following to be appointed; viz, Sir Wm. Osbourne, Mr. James Fortescue, Sir Arthur Brooke, Sir Archd. Acheson, Henry King, Esq., Lord Miltown, and Richard Fitzgerald, Ralph Howard, Silver Oliver, and Edward Carey, Esqs. They are gentlemen of great property and reputation in the country, and have steadily supported Government in all the great points of the Session. Asks His Majesty also to accept his recommendation of the three peerages which he sent over in November 1768 (for Mr. Thomas Dawson, Mr. William Henry Dawson, and Mr. Bernard Ward); likewise for a person whom, both from affection and alliance, he is bound not to neglect, viz., Lady Egmont and her heirs male, which he would flatter himself would not be unfavourably received by His Majesty. Mr. Clotworthy Upton, clerk of the Household to the Princess of Wales, has stated that Her Royal Highness patronises his suit, and has authorized him to make use of her name to his Excellency. Lays the same before His Majesty; and also the wishes of Sir George Macartney, who formerly made application for a peerage. He, the Lord Lieutenant, renews it with pleasure in favour of a gentleman so nearly connected with himself in his present situation, and who has used his best endeavours, with equal zeal and success, for His Majesty's service. Mentions also for advancement to honours the desires of Mr. William Henry Fortescue and Sir Penyston Lamb.

Recommends such a number with the greater freedom, because for some years past no Chief Governor during his residence has made so few peers as he has done; and because, notwithstanding the number of which it is supposed the Irish Peerage consists, there are twenty-eight which, in all human probability, will expire with their present possessors.—Dublin Castle. v. 436, No. 80.1392. The SAME to the SAME.

Intends, notwithstanding he has been much indisposed for some days past, to go to Parliament on Monday next, and enter his protest against the proceedings of the House of Commons with regard to the rejected Money Bill, and then to prorogue it for three months.

Letters having been received from London by some gentlemen, and some motions having been made for the customary allowances in the House of Peers earlier than usual, the House of Commons took the alarm, of which the servants of the Crown in opposition made their advantage, and, bringing down suddenly their followers from all quarters, carried by 107 to 69 this most extraordinary and unprecedented motion, made without any previous notice to the House:—"That an address should be presented to the Lord Lieutenant that he would be pleased to inform the House whether he had any instructions or intentions to prorogue the Parliament sooner than usual." His own opinion was to give no answer, but the servants of the Crown most earnestly entreated him to send some answer that would prevent their adjourning from day to day (as was once the case in the Duke of Bedford's administration) and save the Augmentation and the Money Bills. Thereupon sent them the following:—

"Gentlemen,

"I shall always be desirous of complying with your request when I can do it with propriety.

"I do not think myself authorised to disclose His Majesty's instructions to me until I receive His Majesty's commands for so doing.

"With regard to my intentions, they will be regulated by my instructions and future events."

This answer at first occasioned much debate in the House, but the friends of Government and the independent gentlemen of the country, alarmed at the consequences of this proceeding, attended well. Some of the popular leaders began to have the same feelings, and to interest themselves for the fate of the Money Bills; and upon the question of adjournment, Government beat them by 114 to 99, notwithstanding the utmost exertion of the great powers, viz., the Duke of Leinster, Mr. Ponsonby, Lord Shannon, Lord Lanesborough, and Lord Loftus.

Must not omit mentioning another instance of the violent (sic), and, he thinks, decline of influence of these parties. Upon a question whether the pension report should be received or put off till after the recess, Government carried it by a majority of 93 to 89. This report is the most incorrect, indecent, and partial production ever composed. It was intended to be followed by an address to the King on the subject of his bounty to his servants in England. This was likewise put off by the above-mentioned majority till after the holidays, in opposition to the utmost efforts of the powers before described. And the public beheld, not without indignation, those persons condemning the same favours in others through whose recommendations they had received much larger for themselves and their friends. From this success on the part of Government, and the disposition of many who, though they have often divided against it, yet, upon great and interesting questions, do not choose to drive English Government too far, there seems to be a fair occasion of extending its ground and improving its numbers in this Parliament beyond all doubt of success. The changes recommended will, if approved, operate strongly during the prorogation; and when a temporary clamour shall have subsided, which is much less detrimental to H.M.'s service than the constant hostility of his servants, then mankind will be able to discern where the real weight of Government resides, and many will join "us" who at present dare not follow their inclinations. The men of the first abilities, experience, and credit are certainly with Government. The sense of the country by no means favours, though it has been long governed by, its opponents. There will be a fair opportunity to know both what are the sentiments of the members of the present, or the general disposition of the kingdom with regard to a future Parliament, before the next step which may be judged necessary shall be taken. At all events nothing can be more hazardous or hopeless than the continuance of men in power who have made such a use of it.

Went this day to the House of Lords, and, after giving the Royal assent to the two Money Bills, made a speech to both Houses, and ordered his protest to be entered in the journals of the House of Peers, in the same manner as my Lord Sydney did. The Parliament was then prorogued till 20 March next. Encloses copies of the speech and protest.

Is extremely impatient for news from England, there being now nine mails due. His Lordship's last letters are of the 13th inst.

Notwithstanding the many vicissitudes of the Session, hopes it will appear to have produced, all circumstances considered, a prosperous conclusion, though it has been earlier than usual. The Money Bills are passed, the Augmentation is carried, and all that is commonly called the King's business is finally settled. That which is in arrear must, and he believes will, be set down to the extravagance of party here.—Dublin Castle.

1394. CLIPPING AND COINING AT HALIFAX.

Letters and enclosures relating to the steps taken to discover the persons concerned in the practice of clipping and coining in Halifax, and in the murder of Deighton, [a Supervisor of Excise,] who lost his life for the pains he had taken in making discoveries in regard to them (23 a). From these papers the following particulars are extracted.

The Marquis of Rockingham, on being communicated with by Lord Weymouth, summoned a meeting of all the gentlemen in the commission of the peace residing near Halifax, Bradford, Leeds, and Wakefield, whether they were acting justices or not; at which most of those he wrote to attended; and of those who could not come, almost all sent assurances that they would exert themselves to the utmost on the occasion. The result was that many gentlemen who had not before acted in the commission of the peace took out their "dedimus" to assist. The Marquis enclosed the resolutions of the meeting in his letter of 1 Dec., with the names of the persons present. They particularly authorised his Lordship to recommend Deighton's widow for His Majesty's bounty. At the moment of his death she had literally no money in the house, but the charitable donations of several persons more than supplied her immediate necessities.

The practice of clipping and coining had been going on in the neighbourhood of Halifax, Huddersfield, Bradford, &c., for some years. At different periods complaints were made and informations given to the Solicitor of the Mint, and also in the Secretary of State's office, but had been dropped without further examination. It was supposed that there were not above four shops where they coined, but that there were eight or ten or more gangs of clippers, and that one or two hundred persons had been concerned in clipping, coining, and uttering false or diminished coin. The clipped guineas were diminished in weight of gold about 3s. 4d. The Portugal money, coined as supposed out of clippings, was usually moldores, which contained about 22s. of gold, and passed for 27s., so that seven good guineas in passing through their hands left a profit of 27s. The Marquis suggested that some useful information might come out by having recourse to a letter from Mr. Woodford, the English Resident at Altena, which he sent to Government in 1767. The knowledge of the existence of such a letter was gained from a letter from an English merchant at Altena, which mentioned the fact, the copy of which letter the Marquis enclosed. Search was made for the letter mentioned to have been written by Mr. Woodford, but it could not be found, nor could Mr. Woodford himself recollect having written such a letter (23 e).

Among the efforts previously made for the discovery of the coiners was the employment (23 a) by Mr. Lister, a very active and deserving justice of the peace, in conjunction with Mr. Stanhope, an eminent "council," of two men, named James Crabtree and William Hailey, to associate themselves with persons suspected, in order to make discoveries. Mr. Lister and Mr. Stanhope both died about the same time, and shortly before the date of these letters; but, luckily for the men, one or two other gentlemen were privy to the transaction. One of the men was taken up on a warrant from a justice of the peace. The warrant was, however, withdrawn, and the Marquis said he was taking precautions that these men should not be laid hold on; or, if they were, he asked [Lord Weymouth] to take care that no harm should befall them. The authentic proofs in writing, consisting of a letter and certificate from the two gentlemen (Messrs. Lister and Hustler), who were privy to the employment of Crabtree and Hailey, were afterwards transmitted by Lord Rockingham (23 j, l, m).

The Solicitor to the Mint, upon some informations being communicated to him (23 a), had declared that his salary did not enable him to carry on prosecutions; but the Marquis asked that he might be sent down to Halifax, accompanied by some persons from the Mint, and that the prosecutions might be carried on at the public expense. Both his requests were granted (23 f); and the coming of Mr. Chamberlayne, the Solicitor to the Mint, proved of great service (23 p).

Deighton's widow received a pension of 50*l.* per ann., and 200*l.* to apprentice her younger children (23 o).

The papers consist of the following letters, &c. :—

Asks for his patronage and protection in obtaining the mark of favour which the Lord Lieutenant has recommended him for to His Majesty. Though the Irish peerage is supposed to be very numerous, yet the account of it is greatly exaggerated, and in general much misunderstood. Several have expired within these few years, and it is almost certain that near thirty will expire with their present possessors. Since he has been in his present employment neither he himself nor any of his friends have received the smallest favour from Government. As the Attorney and Solicitor General reported it to be expedient to refer it to the House of Lords, and that the prerogative of the Crown appeared to be interested therein, his Excellency thought it best to consult the Chancellor upon the propriety of the measure, by whose opinion he asks that the state of this matter may be represented to the King.—Dublin Castle.

1398. The SAME to the SAME.

Received this day his letters of the 15th and 17th inst. Is happy that the steps he has taken have been approved of. Since the prorogation nothing new has happened. Most people are gone into the country, except the Speaker, who, either really apprehending or pretending to apprehend a dissolution of Parliament, remains here in order to justify his measures, and to secure his re-election to the chair. Does not think he will meet with much success, as mankind seem pretty well persuaded that the blame lies at the door of Mr. Ponsonby himself, who was the cause of the measure, and not of those whom his conduct obliged to execute it. Is of opinion that if the plan sent over in his despatch of the 23rd be adopted, before the next meeting of Parliament, (which he presumes His Majesty will not think necessary before October 1771,) the government of this country may be made much less difficult than for many Sessions past. There are no Bills of consequence that will expire before 1771, the delay of which can be attended with any inconvenience to H.M.'s affairs. There are, however, certain sums of money, to the amount of 28,000*l.*, which are granted at large in the Money Bill, and were to be apportioned by a special Act of Parliament to several public uses, such as the city of Dublin, &c. This money, when applied for by petition to Government, as it soon will be, may be granted by King's letter, as on a former occasion, and will be considered as a popular act flowing from His Majesty's goodness.

Is told that many of the gentlemen in opposition, as soon as they returned to the House after the prorogation, entered into an agreement never to give more than a six months' Money Bill. Such circumstances call for the immediate attention of English Government to improve the hereditary revenue by every prudent means. It is this alone that can contain the parties of this country within any bounds, and render its authority permanent.

Sends the proceedings of the House of Lords relative to the affair of their clerk, who, it was pretended, held his office in trust for Lord Beauchamp, which made so much noise in the last Session, and which has been revived in this by Lord Mountmorris, a nephew of the Speaker's, with as much rancour as in the former. [See under date 12 March 1768, No. 803.] But the House of Lords have taken care that no sudden attack of the same kind shall be made for the future upon a peer of Parliament without giving him fair notice.

This Lord Mountmorris, together with others, some of whom are not without their obligations to Government, entered the extraordinary protest, which is herewith enclosed in order to show not only the views of some people here, but also to what lengths men will go against one Lord Lieutenant after the most recent favours received under his predecessors.—Dublin Castle.

The enclosures. The two resolutions of the Committee to which the House agreed were—(1) that Doctor Gayer was no longer under any engagement to any person whatever touching the emoluments of his office; that he and his brother, the joint patentees, were to receive to their own use the whole profits, and that he had been discharged from all engagements from the 19th of April 1768; and (2) that his engagement to part with all the profits of his office, except 200*l.* to some person unknown to him, was that the profits so parted with might be applied for charitable purposes for the relief of some poor families in distress and objects of compassion. The Lords also resolved, that on any matter being agitated by the House, in which the honour or character of a Lord of Parliament was by name or implication affected, should he be absent, notice should be given him, by letter from the Lord Chancellor or Speaker of the House, of such matters being under consideration, in order that he might appear in person or give such information as he might think proper.

The protest was signed by Lords Lowth, Charlemount, Powerscourt, Mountmorris, and Longford, and was entered by them as the minority, after a debate and division, on Dec. 22, upon a motion that no protest of any one not a Lord of Parliament and a member of the House, and which did not respect a matter which had been previously in question before the House, and wherein the Lord protesting had taken part with the minority, either in person or by proxy, should be entered on the journals of the House. In regard to the only two existing precedents of protests being entered by Chief Governors, the protesting Lords conceived that the Earl of Strafford, who first attempted it, and that but in a single instance, was a person of such an arbitrary spirit, and the times in which he lived of so bad an example, and his protest so faulty and informal of itself, that his proceeding ought not to be considered a precedent; while that of Lord Sidney, which was made in heat, and whose conduct was disapproved on his recall to England, which soon followed, was still more irregular and improper, as it related to a matter which had never been before the House of Lords, and respected the privileges and proceedings of the other House. CALENDARS OF STATE PAPERS, &c.

As far back as the year 1800, a Committee of the House of Commons recommended that Indexes and Calendars should be made to the Public Records, and thirty-six years afterwards another Committee of the House of Commons reiterated that recommendation in more forcible words; but it was not until the incorporation of the State Paper Office with the Public Record Office that the Master of the Rolls found himself in a position to take the necessary steps for carrying out the wishes of the House of Commons.

On 7 December 1855, he stated to the Lords of the Treasury that although "the Records, State Papers, and Documents in his charge constitute the most complete and perfect series of their kind in the civilized world," and although "they are of the greatest value in a historical and constitutional point of view, yet they are comparatively useless to the public, from the want of proper Calendars and Indexes."

Acting upon the recommendations of the Committees of the House of Commons above referred to, he suggested to the Lords of the Treasury that to effect the object he had in view it would be necessary for him to employ a few Persons fully qualified to perform the work which he contemplated.

Their Lordships assented to the necessity of having Calendars prepared and printed, and empowered the Master of the Rolls to take such steps as might be necessary for this purpose.

The following Works have been already published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls :—

Mr. Bergenroth also visited Madrid, and examined the Papers there, bearing on the reign of Henry VIII. The first volume contains the Spanish Papers of the reign of Henry VII.; the second volume, those of the first portion of the reign of Henry VIII. The Supplement contains new information relating to the private life of Queen Katharine of England; and to the projected marriage of Henry VII. with Queen Juana, widow of King Philip of Castile, and mother of the Emperor Charles V.

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

[ROYAL 8vo. half-bound. Price 10s. each Volume or Part.]

On 25 July 1822, the House of Commons presented an address to the Crown, stating that the editions of the works of our ancient historians were inconvenient and defective; that many of their writings still remained in manuscript, and, in some cases, in a single copy only. They added, "that an uniform and convenient edition of the whole, published under His Majesty's royal sanction, would be an undertaking honourable to His Majesty's reign, and conducive to the advancement of historical and constitutional knowledge; that the House therefore humbly besought His Majesty, that He would be graciously pleased to give such directions as His Majesty, in His wisdom, might think fit, for the publication of a complete edition of the ancient historians of this realm, and assured His Majesty that whatever expense might be necessary for this purpose would be made good."

The Master of the Rolls, being very desirous that effect should be given to the resolution of the House of Commons, submitted to Her Majesty's Treasury in 1857 a plan for the publication of the ancient chronicles and memorials of the United Kingdom, and it was adopted accordingly. In selecting these works, it was considered right, in the first instance, to give preference to those of which the manuscripts were unique, or the materials of which would help to fill up blanks in English history for which no satisfactory and authentic information hitherto existed in any accessible form. One great object the Master of the Rolls had in view was to form a corpus historicum within reasonable limits, and which should be as complete as possible. In a subject of so vast a range, it was important that the historical student should be able to select such volumes as conformed with his own peculiar tastes and studies, and not be put to the expense of purchasing the whole collection; an inconvenience inseparable from any other plan than that which has been in this instance adopted.

Of the Chronicles and Memorials, the following volumes have been published. They embrace the period from the earliest time of British history down to the end of the reign of Henry VII.

1. THE CHRONICLE OF ENGLAND, by JOHN CAPGRAVE. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

Capgrave was prior of Lynn, in Norfolk, and provincial of the order of the Friars Hermits of England shortly before the year 1464. His Chronicle extends from the creation of the world to the year 1417. As a record of the language spoken in Norfolk (being written in English), it is of considerable value.

2. CHRONICON MONASTERII DE ABINGDON. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1858.

This Chronicle traces the history of the great Benedictine monastery of Abingdon in Berkshire, from its foundation by King Ina of Wessex, to the reign of Richard I., shortly after which period the present narrative was drawn up by an inmate of the establishment. The author had access to the title-deeds of the house; and incorporates into his history various charters of the Saxon kings, of great importance as illustrating not only the history of the locality but that of the kingdom. The work is printed for the first time.

3. LIVES OF EDWARD THE CONFESSOR. I.—La Estoire de Seint Aedward le Rei. II.—Vita Beati Edvardi Regis et Confessoris. III.—Vita Æduardi Regis qui apud Westmonasterium requiescit. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1858.

The first is a poem in Norman French, containing 4,686 lines, addressed to Alianor, Queen of Henry III., and probably written in the year 1245, on the occasion of the restoration of the church of Westminster. Nothing is known of the author. The second is an anonymous poem, containing 536 lines, written between the years 1440 and 1450, by command of Henry VI., to whom it is dedicated. It does not throw any new light on the reign of Edward the Confessor, but is valuable as a specimen of the Latin poetry of the time. The third, also by an anonymous author, was apparently written for Queen Edith, between the years 1066 and 1074, during the pressure of the suffering brought on the Saxons by the Norman conquest. It notices many facts not found in other writers, and some which differ considerably from the usual accounts.

4. MONUMENTA FRANCISCANA; scilicet, I.—Thomas de Eccleston de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam. II.—Adæ de Marisco Epistolæ. III.—Registrum Fratrum Minorum Londoniæ. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1858.

This volume contains original materials for the history of the settlement of the order of Saint Francis in England, the letters of Adam de Marisco, and other papers connected with the foundation and diffusion of this great body. It has been the aim of the editor to collect whatever historical information could be found in this country, towards illustrating a period of the national history for which only scanty materials exist. None of these have been before printed.

5. FASCICULI ZIZANIORUM MAGISTRI JOHANNIS WYCLIF CUM TRITICO. Ascribed to THOMAS NETTER, of WALDEN, Provincial of the Carmelite Order in England, and Confessor to King Henry the Fifth. Edited by the Rev. W. W. SHIRLEY, M.A., Tutor and late Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. 1858.

This work derives its principal value from being the only contemporaneous account of the rise of the Lollards. When written the disputes of the school-men had been extended to the field of theology, and they appear both in the writings of Wycliff and in those of his adversaries. Wycliff's little bundles of tares are not less metaphysical than theological, and the conflict between Nominalists and Realists rages side by side with the conflict between the different interpreters of Scripture. The work gives a good idea of the controversies at the end of the 14th and the beginning of the 15th centuries.

6. THE BUIK OF THE CRONICLIS OF SCOTLAND; or, A Metrical Version of the History of Hector Boece; by WILLIAM STEWART. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. 1858.

This is a metrical translation of a Latin Prose Chronicle, and was written in the first half of the 16th century. The narrative begins with the earliest legends, and ends with the death of James I. of Scotland, and the "evil ending of the traitors that slew him." Strict accuracy of statement is not to be looked for in such a work as this; but the stories of the colonization of Spain, Ireland, and Scotland are interesting if not true; and the chronicle is valuable as a reflection of the manners, sentiments, and character of the age in which it was composed. The peculiarities of the Scottish dialect are well illustrated in this metrical version, and the student of language will find ample materials for comparison with the English dialects of the same period, and with modern lowland Scotch.

7. JOHANNIS CAPGRAVE LIBER DE ILLUSTRIBUS HENRICIS. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

This work is dedicated to Henry VI. of England, who appears to have been, in the author's estimation, the greatest of all the Henries. It is divided into three distinct parts, each having its own separate dedication. The first part relates only to the history of the Empire, and extends from the election of Henry I., the Fowler, to the end of the reign of the Emperor Henry VI. The second part is devoted to English history, and extends from the accession of Henry I. in the year 1100, to the year 1446, which was the twenty-fourth year of the reign of King Henry VI. The third part contains the lives of illustrious men who have borne the name of Henry in various parts of the world.

Capgrave was born in 1393, in the reign of Richard II., and lived during the Wars of the Roses, for the history of which period his work is of some value.

8. HISTORIA MONASTERII S. AUGUSTINI CANTUARIENSIS. by THOMAS OF ELMHAM, formerly Monk and Treasurer of that Foundation. Edited by CHARLES HARDWICK, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's Hall, and Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge. 1858.

This history extends from the arrival of St. Augustine in Kent until 1191. Prefixed is a chronology as far as 1418, which shows in outline what was to have been the character of the work when completed. The only copy known is in the possession of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The author was connected with Norfolk, and most probably with Elmham, whence he derived his name.

9. EULOGIUM (HISTORIARUM SIVE TEMPORIS): Chronicon ab Orbe condito usque ad Annum Domini 1366; a Monacho quodam Malmesbiriensi exaratum. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by F. S. HAYDON, Esq., B.A. 1858-1863.

This is a Latin Chronicle extending from the Creation to the latter part of the reign of Edward III., and written by a monk of the Abbey of Malmesbury, in Wiltshire, about the year 1367. A continuation, carrying the history of England down to the year 1413, was added in the former half of the fifteenth century by an author whose name is not known. The original Chronicle is divided into five books, and contains a history of the world generally, but more especially of England to the year 1366. The continuation extends the history down to the coronation of Henry V. The Eulogium itself is chiefly valuable as containing a history, by a contemporary, of the period between 1356 and 1366. The notices of events appear to have been written very soon after their occurrence. Among other interesting matter, the Chronicle contains a diary of the Poitiers campaign, evidently furnished by some person who accompanied the army of the Black Prince. The continuation of the Chronicle is also the work of a contemporary, and gives a very interesting account of the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. It is believed to be the earliest authority for the statement that the latter monarch died in the Jerusalem Chamber at Westminster.

10. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE SEVENTH: Bernardi Andreæ Tholosatis Vita Regis Henrici Septimi; necnon alia quædam ad eundem Regem spectantia. Edited by JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq. 1858.

The contents of this volume are—(1) a life of Henry VII., by his poet laureate and historiographer, Bernard André, of Toulouse, with some compositions in verse, of which he is supposed to have been the author; (2) the journals of Roger Machado during certain embassies on which he was sent by Henry VII. to Spain and Brittany, the first of which had reference to the marriage of the King's son, Arthur, with Catharine of Arragon; (3) two curious reports by envoys sent to Spain in the year 1505 touching the succession to the Crown of Castile, and a project of marriage between Henry VII. and the Queen of Naples; and (4) an account of Philip of Castile's reception in England in 1506. Other documents of interest in connexion with the period are given in an appendix.

11. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE FIFTH. I.—Vita Henrici Quinti, Roberto Redmanno auctore. II.—Versus Rhythmici in laudem Regis Henrici Quinti. III.—Elmhani Liber Metricus de Henrico V. Edited by CHARLES A. COLE, Esq. 1858.

This volume contains three treatises which more or less illustrate the history of the reign of Henry V., viz.: A Life by Robert Redman; a Metrical Chronicle by Thomas Elmham, prior of Lenton, a contemporary author; Versus Rhythmici written apparently by a monk of Westminster Abbey, who was also a contemporary of Henry V. These works are printed for the first time.

12. MUNIMENTA GILDHALLÆ LONDONIENSIS: Liber Albus, Liber Custumarum, et Liber Horn, in archivis Gildhallæ asservati. Vol. I., Liber Albus. Vol. II. (in Two Parts), Liber Custumarum. Vol. III. Translation of the Anglo-Norman Passages in Liber Albus, Glossaries, Appendices, and Index. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1859-1862.

The manuscript of the Liber Albus, compiled by John Carpenter, Common Clerk of the City of London in the year 1419, a large folio volume, is preserved in the Record Room of the City of London. It gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of that City in the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and early part of the fifteenth centuries.

The Liber Custumarum was compiled probably by various hands in the early part of the fourteenth century during the reign of Edward II. The manuscript, a folio volume, is also preserved in the Record Room of the City of London, though some portion in its original state, borrowed from the City in the reign of Queen Elizabeth and never returned, forms part of the Cottonian MS. Claudius D. II. in the British Museum. It also gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of the City of London in the twelfth, thirteenth, and early part of the fourteenth centuries.

13. CHRONICA JOHANNIS DE OXENEDES. Edited by SIR HENRY ELLIS, K.H. 1859.

Although this Chronicle tells of the arrival of Hengist and Horsa in England in the year 449, yet it substantially begins with the reign of King Alfred, and comes down to the year 1292, where it ends abruptly. The history is particularly valuable for notices of events in the eastern portions of the kingdom, which are not to be elsewhere obtained, and some curious facts are mentioned relative to the floods in that part of England, which are confirmed in the Friesland Chronicle of Anthony Heinrich, pastor of the Island of Mohr.

14. A COLLECTION OF POLITICAL POEMS AND SONGS RELATING TO ENGLISH HISTORY. FROM THE ACCESSION OF EDWARD III. TO THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1859-1861.

These Poems are perhaps the most interesting of all the historical writings of the period, though they cannot be relied on for accuracy of statement. They are various in character; some are upon religious subjects, some may be called satires, and some give no more than a court scandal; but as a whole they present a very fair picture of society, and of the relations of the different classes to one another. The period comprised is in itself interesting, and brings us, through the decline of the feudal system, to the beginning of our modern history. The songs in old English are of considerable value to the philologist.

15. THE "OPUS TERTIUM," "OPUS MINUS," &c., of ROGER BACON. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1859.

This is the celebrated treatise—never before printed—so frequently referred to by the great philosopher in his works. It contains the fullest details we possess of the life and labours of Roger Bacon: also a fragment by the same author, supposed to be unique, the "Compendium Studii Theologie."

16. BARTHOLOMÆI DE COTTON, MONACHI NORWICENSIS, HISTORIA ANGELICANA: 449-1298: necnon ejusdem Liber de Archiepiscopis et Episcopis Angliæ. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1859.

The author, a monk of Norwich, has here given us a Chronicle of England from the arrival of the Saxons in 449 to the year 1293, in or about which year it appears that he died. The latter portion of this history (the whole of the reign of Edward I. more especially) is of great value, as the writer was contemporary with the events which he records. An Appendix contains several illustrative documents connected with the previous narrative.

17. BRUT Y TYWYSOGION: OR, THE CHRONICLE OF THE PRINCES OF WALES. Edited by the Rev. JOHN WILLIAMS AB ITHEL, M.A. 1860.

This work, also known as "The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales," has been attributed to Caradoc of Llancarvan, who flourished about the middle of the twelfth century. It is written in the ancient Welsh language, begins with the abdication and death of Caedwala at Rome, in the year 681, and continues the history down to the subjugation of Wales by Edward I., about the year 1282.

18. A COLLECTION OF ROYAL AND HISTORICAL LETTERS DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY IV. 1399-1404. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1860.

This volume, like all the others in the series containing a miscellaneous selection of letters, is valuable on account of the light it throws upon biographical history, and the familiar view it presents of characters, manners, and events. The period requires much elucidation; to which it will materially contribute.

19. THE REPRESSOR OF OVER MUCH BLAMING OF THE CLERGY. By REGINALD PECOCK, sometime Bishop of Chichester. Vols. I. and II. Edited by CHURCHILL BABINGTON, B.D., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1860.

The "Repressor" may be considered the earliest piece of good theological disquisition of which our English prose literature can boast. The author was born about the end of the fourteenth century, consecrated Bishop of St. Asaph in the year 1444, and translated to the see of Chichester in 1450. While Bishop of St. Asaph, he zealously defended his brother prelates from the attacks of those who censured the bishops for their neglect of duty. He maintained that it was no part of a bishop's functions to appear in the pulpit, and that his time might be more profitably spent, and his dignity better maintained, in the performance of works of a higher character. Among those who thought differently were the Lollards, and against their general doctrines the "Repressor" is directed. Pecock took up a position midway between that of the Roman Church and that of the modern Anglican Church; but his work is interesting chiefly because it gives a full account of the views of the Lollards and of the arguments by which they were supported, and because it assists us to ascertain the state of feeling which ultimately led to the Reformation. Apart from religious matters, the light thrown upon contemporaneous history is very small, but the "Repressor" has great value for the philologist, as it tells us what were the characteristics of the language in use among the cultivated Englishmen of the fifteenth century. Pecock, though an opponent of the Lollards, showed a certain spirit of toleration, for which he received, towards the end of his life, the usual mediæval reward—persecution.

20. ANNALES CAMBRIÆ. Edited by the Rev. JOHN WILLIAMS AB ITHEL, M.A. 1860.

These annals, which are in Latin, commence in the year 447, and come down to the year 1288. The earlier portion appears to be taken from an Irish Chronicle, which was also used by Tigernach, and by the compiler of the Annals of Ulster. During its first century it contains scarcely anything relating to Britain, the earliest direct concurrence with English history is relative to the mission of Augustine. Its notices throughout, though brief, are valuable. The annals were probably written at St. Davids, by Blegewryd, Archdeacon of Llandaff, the most learned man in his day in all Cymru.

21. THE WORKS OF GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS. Vols. I., II., III., and IV. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. Vols. V., VI., and VII. Edited by the Rev. JAMES F. DIMOCK, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1861-1877.

These volumes contain the historical works of Gerald du Barry, who lived in the reigns of Henry II., Richard I., and John, and attempted to re-establish the independence of Wales by restoring the see of St. Davids to its ancient primacy. His works are of a very miscellaneous nature, both in prose and verse, and are remarkable chiefly for the racy and original anecdotes which they contain relating to contemporaries. He is the only Welsh writer of any importance who has contributed so much to the mediæval literature of this country, or assumed, in consequence of his nationality, so free and independent a tone. His frequent travels in Italy, in France, in Ireland, and in Wales, gave him opportunities for observation which did not generally fall to the lot of mediæval writers in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and of these observations Giraldus has made due use. Only extracts from these treatises have been printed before, and almost all of them are taken from unique manuscripts.

The Topographia Hibernica (in Vol. V.) is the result of Giraldus' two visits to Ireland. The first in the year 1183, the second in 1185-6, when he accompanied Prince John into that country. Curious as this treatise is, Mr. Dimock is of opinion that it ought not to be accepted as sober truthful history, for Giraldus himself states that truth was not his main object, and that he compiled the work for the purpose of sounding the praises of Henry the Second. Elsewhere, however, he declares that he had stated nothing in the Topographia of the truth of which he was not well assured, either by his own eyesight or by the testimony, with all diligence elicited, of the most trustworthy and authentic men in the country; that though he did not put just the same full faith in their reports as in what he had himself seen, yet, as they only related what they had themselves seen, he could not but believe such credible witnesses. A very interesting portion of this treatise is devoted to the animals of Ireland. It shows that he was a very accurate and acute observer, and his descriptions are given in a way that a scientific naturalist of the present day could hardly improve upon. The Expugnatio Hibernica was written about the year 1188 and may be regarded rather as a great epic than a sober relation of acts occurring in his own days. No one can peruse it without coming to the conclusion that it is rather a poetical fiction than a prosaic truthful history.

Vol. VI. contains the Liberatum Kambrie et Descriptio Kambrie; and Vol. VII., the lives of S. Remigius and S. Hugh.

22. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE WARS OF THE ENGLISH IN FRANCE DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY THE SIXTH, KING OF ENGLAND. Vol. I., and Vol. II. (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1861-1864.

The letters and papers contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from originals or contemporary copies extant in the Bibliothèque Impériale, and the Dépôt des Archives, in Paris. They illustrate the line of policy adopted by John Duke of Bedford and his successors during their government of Normandy, and such other provinces of France as had been acquired by Henry V. We may here trace, step by step, the gradual declension of the English power, until we are prepared to read of its final overthrow.

23. THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE, ACCORDING TO THE SEVERAL ORIGINAL AUTHORITIES. Vol. I., Original Texts. Vol. II., Translation. Edited and translated by BENJAMIN THORPE, Esq., Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Munich, and of the Society of Netherlandish Literature at Leyden. 1861.

This Chronicle, extending from the earliest history of Britain to the year 1154, is justly the boast of England; for no other nation can produce any history, written in its own vernacular, at all approaching it, either in antiquity, truthfulness, or extent, the historical books of the Bible alone excepted. There are at present six independent manuscripts of the Saxon Chronicle, ending in different years, and written in different parts of the country. In this edition, the text of each manuscript is printed in columns on the same page, so that the student may see at a glance the various changes which occur in orthography, whether arising from locality or age.

24. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGNS OF RICHARD III. AND HENRY VII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq. 1861-1863.

The Papers are derived from MSS. in the Public Record Office, the British Museum, and other repositories. The period to which they refer is unusually destitute of chronicles and other sources of historical information, so that the light obtained from these documents is of special importance. The principal contents of the volumes are some diplomatic Papers of Richard III.; correspondence between Henry VII. and Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain; documents relating to Edmund de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk; and a portion of the correspondence of James IV. of Scotland.

25. LETTERS OF BISHOP GROSSETESTE, illustrative of the Social Condition of his Time. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1861.

The Letters of Robert Grosseteste (131 in number) are here collected from various sources, and a large portion of them is printed for the first time. They range in date from about 1210 to 1253, and relate to various matters connected not only with the political history of England during the reign of Henry III., but with its ecclesiastical condition. They refer especially to the diocese of Lincoln, of which Grosseteste was bishop.

26. DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE OF MANUSCRIPTS RELATING TO THE HISTORY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. Vol. I. (in Two Parts); Anterior to the Norman Invasion. Vol. II.; 1066-1200. Vol. III.; 1200-1327. By Sir THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, D.C.L., Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. 1862-1871.

The object of this work is to publish notices of all known sources of British history, both printed and unprinted, in one continued sequence. The materials, when historical (as distinguished from biographical), are arranged under the year in which the latest event is recorded in the chronicle or history, and not under the period in which its author, real or supposed, flourished. Biographies are enumerated under the year in which the person commemorated died, and not under the year in which the life was written. This arrangement has two advantages; the materials for any given period may be seen at a glance; and if the reader knows the time when an author wrote, and the number of years that had elapsed between the date of the events and the time the writer flourished, he will generally be enabled to form a fair estimate of the comparative value of the narrative itself. A brief analysis of each work has been added when deserving it, in which the original portions are distinguished from those which are mere compilations. When possible, the sources are indicated from which such compilations have been derived. A biographical sketch of the author of each piece has been added, and a brief notice has also been given of such British authors as have written on historical subjects.

27. ROYAL AND OTHER HISTORICAL LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGN OF HENRY III. Vol. I., 1216-1235. Vol. II., 1236-1272. Selected and edited by the Rev. W. W. SHIRLEY, D.D., Regius Professor in Ecclesiastical History, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, 1862-1866.

The letters contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from the ancient correspondence formerly in the Tower of London, and now in the Public Record Office. They illustrate the political history of England during the growth of its liberties, and throw considerable light upon the personal history of Simon de Montfort. The affairs of France form the subject of many of them, especially in regard to the province of Gascony. The entire collection consists of nearly 700 documents, the greater portion of which is printed for the first time.

YPODIGMA NEUSTRIÆ, A THOMÆ WALSINGHAM, QUONDAM MONACHO MONASTERII S. ALBANI, CONSCRIPTUM. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., Cambridge and Oxford; and of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863-1876.

In the first two volumes is a History of England, from the death of Henry III. to the death of Henry V., by Thomas Walsingham, Precentor of St. Albans, from MS. VII. in the Arundel Collection in the College of Arms, London, a manuscript of the fifteenth century, collated with MS. 13 E. IX. in the King's Library in the British Museum, and MS. VII. in the Parker Collection of Manuscripts at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

In the third volume is a Chronicle of English History, attributed to William Rishanger, who lived in the reign of Edward I., from the Cotton. MS. Faustina B. IX. in the British Museum, collated with MS. 14 C. VII. (fols. 219-231) in the King's Library, British Museum, and the Cotton MS. Claudius E. III., fols. 306-331: an account of transactions attending the award of the kingdom of Scotland to John Balliol, 1291-1292, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI., also attributed to William Rishanger, but on no sufficient ground; a short Chronicle of English History, 1292 to 1300, by an unknown hand, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: a short Chronicle, Wilhelmi Rishanger Gesta Edwardi Primi, Regis Angliæ, from MS. 14 C. 1, in the Royal Library, and MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI., with Annales Regum Angliæ, probably by the same hand; and fragments of three Chronicles of English History, 1285 to 1307.

In the fourth volume is a Chronicle of English History, 1259 to 1296, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: Annals of Edward II., 1307 to 1323, by John de Trokelowe, a monk of St. Albans, and a continuation of Trokelowe's Annals, 1323, 1324, by Henry de Blaneforde, both from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: a full Chronicle of English History, 1392 to 1406, from MS. VII. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; and an account of the Benefactors of St. Albans, written in the early part of the fifteenth century, from MS. VI. in the same Library.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh volumes contain a history of the Abbots of St. Albans, 793 to 1411, mainly compiled by Thomas Walsingham, from MS. Cotton. Claudius E. IV., in the British Museum; with a Continuation, from the closing pages of Parker MS. VII., in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

The eighth and ninth volumes, in continuation of the Annals, contain a Chronicle, probably by John Amundesham, a monk of St. Albans.

The tenth and eleventh volumes relate especially to the acts and proceedings of Abbots Whethamstede, Alton, and Wallingford, and may be considered as a memorial of the chief historical and domestic events during those periods.

The twelfth volume contains a compendious History of England to the reign of Henry V. and of Normandy in early times, also by Thomas Walsingham, and dedicated to Henry V. The compiler has often substituted other authorities in place of those consulted in the preparation of his larger work.

29. CHRONICON ABBATIE EVESHAMENSIS, AUCTORIBUS DOMINICO PRIORI EVESHAMLE ET THOMA DE MARLEBERGE ABBATE, A FUNDATIONE AD ANNUM 1213, UNA CUM CONTINUATIONE AD ANNUM 1418. Edited by the Rev. W. D. MACRAY, M.A., Bodleian Library, Oxford. 1863.

The Chronicle of Evesham illustrates the history of that important monastery from its foundation by Egwin, about 690, to the year 1418. Its chief feature is an autobiography, which makes us acquainted with the inner daily life of a great abbey, such as but rarely has been recorded. Interspersed are many notices of general, personal, and local history which will be read with much interest. This work exists in a single MS., and is for the first time printed.

30. RICARDI DE CIRENCESTRIA SPECULUM HISTORIALE DE GESTIS REGUM ANGLIÆ. Vol. I., 447-871. Vol. II., 872-1066. Edited by JOHN E. B. MAYOR, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1863-1869.

The compiler, Richard of Cirencester, was a monk of Westminster, 1355-1400. In 1391 he obtained a licence to make a pilgrimage to Rome. His history, in four books, extends from 447 to 1066. He announces his intention of continuing it, but there is no evidence that he completed any more. This chronicle gives many charters in favour of Westminster Abbey, and a very full account of the lives and miracles of the saints, especially of Edward the Confessor, whose reign occupies the fourth book. A treatise on the Coronation, by William of Sudbury, a monk of Westminster, fills book iii. c. 3. It was on this author that C. J. Bertram fathered his forgery, De Situ Britannia, in 1747.

31. YEAR BOOKS OF THE REIGN OF EDWARD THE FIRST. Years 20-21, 21-22, 30-31, 32-33, and 33-35. Edited and translated by ALFRED JOHN HORWOOD, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863-1879.

The volumes known as the "Year Books" contain reports in Norman-French of cases argued and decided in the Courts of Common Law. They may be considered to a great extent as the "lex non scripta" of England, and have been held in the highest veneration by the ancient sages of the law, and were received by them as the repositories of the first recorded judgments and dicta of the great legal luminaries of past ages. They are also worthy of the attention of the general reader on account of the historical information and the notices of public and private persons which they contain, as well as the light which they throw on ancient manners and customs.

32. NARRATIVES OF THE EXPULSION OF THE ENGLISH FROM NORMANDY, 1449-1450.—Robertus Blondelli de Reductione Normanniæ: Le Recouvrement de Normandie, par Berry, Hérault du Roy: Conférences between the Ambassadors of France and England. Edited, from MSS. in the Imperial Library at Paris, by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham. 1863.

This volume contains the narrative of an eye-witness who details with considerable power and minuteness the circumstances which attended the final expulsion of the English from Normandy in the year 1450. The history commences with the infringement of the truce by the capture of Fougères, and ends with the battle of Formigny and the embarkation of the Duke of Somerset. The whole period embraced is less than two years.

33. HISTORIA ET CARTULARIUM MONASTERII S. PETRI GLOUCESTRIÆ. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. H. HART, Esq., F.S.A., Membre correspondant de la Société des Antiquaires de Normandie. 1863-1867.

This work consists of two parts, the History and the Cartulary of the Monastery of St. Peter, Gloucester. The history furnishes an account of the monastery from its foundation, in the year 681, to the early part of the reign of Richard II., together with a calendar of donations and benefactions. It treats principally of the affairs of the monastery, but occasionally matters of general history are introduced. Its authorship has generally been assigned to Walter Froucester, the twentieth abbot, but without any foundation.

34. ALEXANDRI NECKAM DE NATURIS RERUM LIBRI DUO; with NECKAM'S POEM, DE LAUDIBUS DIVINÆ SAPIENTIÆ. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1863.

Neckam was a man who devoted himself to science, such as it was in the twelfth century. In the "De Naturis Rerum" are to be found what may be called the rudiments of many sciences mixed up with much error and ignorance. Neckam was not thought infallible, even by his contemporaries, for Roger Bacon remarks of him, "this Alexander in many things wrote what was true and useful; but he neither can nor ought by just title to be reckoned among authorities." Neckam, however, had sufficient independence of thought to differ from some of the schoolmen who in his time considered themselves the only judges of literature. He had his own views in morals, and in giving us a glimpse of them, as well as of his other opinions, he throws much light upon the manners, customs, and general tone of thought prevalent in the twelfth century. The poem entitled "De Laudibus Divinæ Sapientiæ" appears to be a metrical paraphrase or abridgment of the "De Naturis Rerum." It is written in the elegiac metre; and though there are many lines which violate classical rules, it is, as a whole above the ordinary standard of mediæval Latin.

35. LEECHDOMS, WORTCUNNING, AND STARCRAFT OF EARLY ENGLAND; being a Collection of Documents illustrating the History of Science in this Country before the Norman Conquest. Vols. I., II., and III. Collected and edited by the Rev. T. OSWALD COCKAYNE, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1864-1866.

This work illustrates not only the history of science, but the history of superstition. In addition to the information bearing directly upon the medical skill and medical faith of the times, there are many passages which incidentally throw light upon the general mode of life and ordinary diet. The volumes are interesting not only in their scientific, but also in their social aspect. The manuscripts from which they have been printed are valuable to the Anglo-Saxon scholar for the illustrations they afford of Anglo-Saxon orthography.

36. ANNALES MONASTICI. Vol. I.:—Annales de Margan, 1066-1232; Annales de Theokesberia, 1066-1263; Annales de Burton, 1004-1263. Vol. II.:—Annales Monasterii de Wintonia, 519-1277; Annales Monasterii de Waverleia, 1-1291. Vol. III.:—Annales Prioratus de Dunstaplia, 1-1297; Annales Monasterii de Bermundeseia 1042-

1432. Vol. IV. :—Annales Monasterii de Oseneia, 1016-1347; Chronicon vulgo dictum Chronicon Thomæ Wyke, 1066-1289; Annales Prioratus de Wigornia, 1-1377. Vol. V. :—Index and Glossary. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, and Registry of the University, Cambridge. 1864-1869.

The present collection of Monastic Annals embraces all the more important chronicles compiled in religious houses in England during the thirteenth century. These distinct works are ten in number. The extreme period which they embrace ranges from the year 1 to 1432, although they refer more especially to the reigns of John, Henry III., and Edward I. Some of these narratives have already appeared in print, but others are printed for the first time.

37. MAGNA VITA S. HUGONIS EPISCOPI LINCOLNIENSIS. From Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and the Imperial Library, Paris. Edited by the Rev. JAMES F. DIMOCK, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1864.

This work contains a number of very curious and interesting incidents, and being the work of a contemporary, is very valuable, not only as a truthful biography of a celebrated ecclesiastic, but as the work of a man, who, from personal knowledge, gives notices of passing events, as well as of individuals who were then taking active part in public affairs. The author, in all probability, was Adam Abbot of Evesham. He was domestic chaplain and private confessor of Bishop Hugh, and in these capacities was admitted to the closest intimacy. Bishop Hugh was Prior of Witham for 11 years before he became Bishop of Lincoln. His consecration took place on the 21st September 1186; he died on the 16th of November 1200; and was canonized in 1220.

38. CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF THE REIGN OF RICHARD THE FIRST. Vol. I. :—ITINERARIUM PEREGRINORUM ET GESTA REGIS RICARDI. Vol. II. :—EPISTOLÆ CANTUARIENSES; the Letters of the Prior and Convent of Christ Church, Canterbury; 1187 to 1199. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Vicar of Navestock, Essex, and Lambeth Librarian. 1864-1865.

The authorship of the Chronicle in Vol. I., hitherto ascribed to Geoffrey Vinesauf, is now more correctly ascribed to Richard, Canon of the Holy Trinity of London. The narrative extends from 1187 to 1199; but its chief interest consists in the minute and authentic narrative which it furnishes of the exploits of Richard I., from his departure from England in December 1189 to his death in 1199. The author states in his prologue that he was an eye-witness of much that he records; and various incidental circumstances which occur in the course of the narrative confirm this assertion.

The letters in Vol. II., written between 1187 and 1199, are of value as furnishing authentic materials for the history of the ecclesiastical condition of England during the reign of Richard I. They had their origin in a dispute which arose from the attempts of Baldwin and Hubert, archbishops of Canterbury, to found a college of secular canons, a project which gave great umbrage to the monks of Canterbury, who saw in it a design to supplant them in their function of metropolitan chapter. These letters are printed, for the first time, from a MS. belonging to the archiepiscopal library at Lambeth.

39. RECUEIL DES CHRONIQUES ET ANCIENNES HISTOIRES DE LA GRANT BRETAGNE A PRESENT NOMME ENGLETERRE, par JEHAN DE WAURIN. Vol. I. Albina to 688. Vol. II., 1399-1422. Edited by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A. 1864-1868.

40. A COLLECTION OF THE CHRONICLES AND ANCIENT HISTORIES OF GREAT BRITAIN, NOW CALLED ENGLAND, by JOHN DE WAYRIN. Albina to 688. (Translation of the preceding Vol. I.) Edited and translated by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A. 1864.

This curious chronicle extends from the fabulous period of history down to the return of Edward IV. to England in the year 1471, after the second deposition of Henry VI. The manuscript from which the text of the work is taken is preserved in the Imperial Library at Paris, and is believed to be the only complete and nearly contemporary copy in existence. The work, as originally bound, was comprised in six volumes, since rebound in morocco in 12 volumes, folio maximo, vellum, and is illustrated with exquisite miniatures, vignettes, and initial letters. It was written towards the end of the fifteenth century, having been expressly executed for Louis de Bruges, Seigneur de la Gruthuyse and Earl of Winchester, from whose cabinet it passed into the library of Louis XII. at Blois.

41. POLYCHRONICON RANULPHI HIGDEN, with Trevisa's Translation. Vols. I. and II. Edited by CHURCHILL BABINGTON, B.D., Senior Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Vols. III., IV., V., and VI. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH RAWSON LUMBY, B.D., Vicar of St. Edward's, Fellow of St. Catharine's College, and late Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge. 1865-1876.

This is one of the many mediæval chronicles which assume the character of a history of the world. It begins with the creation, and is brought down to the author's own time, the reign of Edward III. Prefixed to the historical portion, is a chapter devoted to geography, in which is given a description of every known land. To say that the Polychronicon was written in the fourteenth century is to say that it is not free from inaccuracies. It has, however, a value apart from its intrinsic merits. It enables us to form a very fair estimate of the knowledge of history and geography which well-informed readers of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries possessed, for it was then the standard work on general history.

The two English translations, which are printed with the original Latin, afford interesting illustrations of the gradual change of our language, for one was made in the fourteenth century, the other in the fifteenth. The differences between Trevisa's version and that of the unknown writer are often considerable.

42. LE LIVRE DE REIS DE BRITTANIE E LE LIVRE DE REIS DE ENGLETERE. Edited by JOHN GLOVER, M.A., Vicar of Brading, Isle of Wight, formerly Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1865.

These two treatises, though they cannot rank as independent narratives, are nevertheless valuable as careful abstracts of previous historians, especially "Le Livre de Reis de Engleterre." Some various readings are given which are interesting to the philologist as instances of semi-Saxonized French.

It is supposed that Peter of Ickham must have been the author, but no certain conclusion on that point has been arrived at.

43. CHRONICA MONASTERII DE MELSA, AB ANNO 1150 USQUE AD ANNUM 1406. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by EDWARD AUGUSTUS BOND, Esq., Assistant Keeper of the Manuscripts, and Egerton Librarian, British Museum. 1866-1868.

The Abbey of Meaux was a Cistercian house, and the work of its abbot is both curious and valuable. It is a faithful and often minute record of the establishment of a religious community, of its progress in forming an ample revenue, of its struggles to maintain its acquisitions, and of its relations to the governing institutions of the country. In addition to the private affairs of the monastery, some light is thrown upon the public events of the time, which are however kept distinct, and appear at the end of the history of each abbot's administration. The text has been printed from what is said to be the autograph of the original compiler, Thomas de Burton, the nineteenth abbot.

44. MATTHEI PARISIENSIS HISTORIA ANGLORUM, SIVE, UT VULGO DICITUR, HISTORIA MINOR. Vols. I., II., and III. 1067-1253. Edited by Sir FREDERIC MADDEN, K.H., Keeper of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1866-1869.

The exact date at which this work was written is, according to the chronicler, 1250. The history is of considerable value as an illustration of the period during which the author lived, and contains a good summary of the events which followed the Conquest. This minor chronicle is, however, based on another work (also written by Matthew Paris) giving fuller details, which has been called the "Historia Major." The chronicle here published, nevertheless, gives some information not to be found in the greater history.

45. LIBER MONASTERII DE HYDA: A CHRONICLE AND CHARTULARY OF HYDE ABBEY, WINCHESTER, 453-1023. Edited, from a Manuscript in the Library of the Earl of Macclesfield, by EDWARD EDWARDS, Esq. 1866.

The "Book of Hyde" is a compilation from much earlier sources which are usually indicated with considerable care and precision. In many cases, however, the Hyde chronicler appears to correct, to qualify, or to amplify—either from tradition or from sources of information not now discoverable—the statements, which, in substance, he adopts. He also mentions, and frequently quotes from writers whose works are either entirely lost or at present known only by fragments.

There is to be found, in the "Book of Hyde," much information relating to the reign of King Alfred which is not known to exist elsewhere. The volume contains some curious specimens of Anglo-Saxon and Mediæval English.

46. CHRONICON SCOTORUM: A CHRONICLE OF IRISH AFFAIRS, FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO 1135; WITH A SUPPLEMENT, CONTAINING THE EVENTS FROM 1141 TO 1150 Edited, with a Translation, by WILLIAM MAUNSELL HENNESSY, Esq., M.R.I.A. 1866.

There is, in this volume, a legendary account of the peopling of Ireland and of the adventures which befell the various heroes who are said to have been connected with Irish history. The details are, however, very meagre both for this period and for the time when history becomes more authentic. The plan adopted in the chronicle gives the appearance of an accuracy to which the earlier portions of the work cannot have any claim. The succession of events is marked, year by year, from A.M. 1599 to A.D. 1150. The principal events narrated in the later portion of the work are, the invasions of foreigners, and the wars of the Irish among themselves. The text has been printed from a MS. preserved in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, written partly in Latin, partly in Irish.

47. THE CHRONICLE OF PIERRE DE LANGTOFT, IN FRENCH VERSE, FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE DEATH OF EDWARD I. Vols. I. and II. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1866-1868.

It is probable that Pierre de Langtoft was a canon of Bridlington, in Yorkshire, and that he lived in the reign of Edward I., and during a portion of the reign of Edward II. This chronicle is divided into three parts; in the first is an abridgment of Geoffrey of Monmouth's "Historia Britonum," in the second, a history of the Anglo-Saxon and Norman kings, down to the death of Henry III., and in the third a history of the reign of Edward I. The principal object of the work was apparently to show the justice of Edward's Scottish wars. The language is singularly corrupt, and a curious specimen of the French of Yorkshire.

48. THE WAR OF THE GAEDHIL WITH THE GAILL, OR, THE INVASIONS OF IRELAND BY THE DANES AND OTHER NORSEMEN. Edited, with a Translation, by JAMES HENTHORN TODD, D.D., Senior Fellow of Trinity College, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University, Dublin. 1867.

The work in its present form, in the editor's opinion, is a comparatively modern version of an undoubtedly ancient original. That it was compiled from contemporary materials has been proved by curious incidental evidence. It is stated in the account given of the battle of Clontarf that the full tide in Dublin Bay on the day of the battle (23 April 1014) coincided with sunrise; and that the returning tide in the evening aided considerably in the defeat of the Danes. The fact has been verified by astronomical calculations, and the inference is that the author of the chronicle, if not himself an eye-witness, must have derived his information from those who were eye-witnesses. The contents of the work are sufficiently described in its title. The story is told after the manner of the Scandinavian Sagas, with poems and fragments of poems introduced into the prose narrative.

49. GESTA REGIS HENRICI SECUNDI BENEDICTI ABBATIS. THE CHRONICLE OF THE REIGNS OF HENRY II. AND RICHARD I., 1169-1192; known

under the name of BENEDICT OF PETERBOROUGH. Vols. I. and II. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford, and Lambeth Librarian. 1867.

This chronicle of the reigns of Henry II. and Richard I. known commonly under the name of Benedict of Peterborough, is one of the best existing specimens of a class of historical compositions of the first importance to the student.

50. MUNIMENTA ACADEMICA, OR, DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF ACADEMICAL LIFE AND STUDIES AT OXFORD (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. HENRY ANSTEY, M.A., Vicar of St. Wendron, Cornwall, and lately Vice-Principal of St. Mary Hall, Oxford. 1868.

This work will supply materials for a History of Academical Life and Studies in the University of Oxford during the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries.

51. CHRONICA MAGISTRI ROGERI DE HOVEDENE. Vols. I., II., III., and IV. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1868-1871.

This work has long been justly celebrated, but not thoroughly understood until Mr. Stubbs' edition. The earlier portion, extending from 732 to 1148, appears to be a copy of a compilation made in Northumbria about 1161, to which Hoveden added little. From 1148 to 1169—a very valuable portion of this work—the matter is derived from another source, to which Hoveden appears to have supplied little, and not always judiciously. From 1170 to 1192 is the portion which corresponds with the Chronicle known under the name of Benedict of Peterborough (see No. 49); but it is not a copy, being sometimes an abridgment, at others a paraphrase; occasionally the two works entirely agree; showing that both writers had access to the same materials, but dealt with them differently. From 1192 to 1201 may be said to be wholly Hoveden's work: it is extremely valuable, and an authority of the first importance.

52. WILLELMI MALMESBURIENSIS MONACHI DE GESTIS PONTIFICUM ANGLORUM LIBRI QUINQUE. Edited, from William of Malmesbury's Autograph MS., by N. E. S. A. HAMILTON, Esq., of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1870.

William of Malmesbury's "Gesta Pontificum" is the principal foundation of English Ecclesiastical Biography, down to the year 1122. The manuscript which has been followed in this Edition is supposed by Mr. Hamilton to be the author's autograph, containing his latest additions and amendments.

53. HISTORIC AND MUNICIPAL DOCUMENTS OF IRELAND, FROM THE ARCHIVES OF THE CITY OF DUBLIN, &c. 1172-1320. Edited by JOHN T. GILBERT, Esq., F.S.A., Secretary of the Public Record Office of Ireland. 1870.

A collection of original documents, elucidating mainly the history and condition of the municipal, middle, and trading classes under or in relation with the rule of England in Ireland,—a subject hitherto in almost total obscurity. Extending over the first hundred and fifty years of the Anglo-Norman settlement, the series includes charters, municipal laws and regulations, rolls of names of citizens and members of merchant-guilds, lists of commodities with their rates, correspondence, illustrations of relations between ecclesiastics and laity; together with many documents exhibiting the state of Ireland during the presence there of the Scots under Robert and Edward Bruce.

54. THE ANNALS OF LOCH CÉ. A CHRONICLE OF IRISH AFFAIRS, FROM 1014 TO 1590. Vols. I. and II. Edited, with a Translation, by WILLIAM MAUNSELL HENNESSY, Esq., M.R.I.A. 1871.

The original of this chronicle has passed under various names. The title of "Annals of Loch Cé" was given to it by Professor O'Curry, on the ground that it was transcribed for Brian Mac Dermot, an Irish chieftain, who resided on the island in Loch Cé, in the county of Roscommon. It adds much to the materials for the civil and ecclesiastical history of Ireland; and contains many curious references to English and foreign affairs, not noticed in any other chronicle.

55. MONUMENTA JURIDICA. THE BLACK BOOK OF THE ADMIRALTY, WITH APPENDICES. Vols. I., II., III., and IV. Edited by SIR TRAVERS TWISS, Q.C., D.C.L. 1871-1876.

This book contains the ancient ordinances and laws relating to the navy, and was probably compiled for the use of the Lord High Admiral of England. Selden calls it the "jewel of the Admiralty Records." Prynne ascribes to the Black Book the same authority in the Admiralty as the Black and Red Books have in the Court of Exchequer, and most English writers on maritime law recognize its importance.

56. MEMORIALS OF THE REIGN OF HENRY VI.:—OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THOMAS BEKYNTON, SECRETARY TO HENRY VI., AND BISHOP OF BATH AND WELLS. Edited, from a MS. in the Archiepiscopal Library at Lambeth, with an Appendix of Illustrative Documents, by the REV. GEORGE WILLIAMS, B.D., Vicar of Ringwood, late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. Vols. I. and II. 1872.

These curious volumes are of a miscellaneous character, and were probably compiled under the immediate direction of Bekynton before he had attained to the Episcopate. They contain many of the Bishop's own letters, and several written by him in the King's name; also letters to himself while Royal Secretary, and others addressed to the King. This work elucidates some points in the history of the nation during the first half of the fifteenth century.

57. MATTHÆI PAPISIENSIS, MONACHI SANCTI ALBANI, CHRONICA MAJORA. Vol. I. The Creation to A.D. 1066. Vol. II. A.D. 1067 to A.D. 1216. Vol. III. A.D. 1216 to A.D. 1239. Vol. IV. A.D. 1240 to A.D. 1247. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, D.D., Fellow of Trinity College, Registrar of the University, and Vicar of Great St. Mary's, Cambridge. 1872-1877.

This work contains the "Chronica Majora" of Matthew Paris, one of the most valuable and frequently consulted of the ancient English Chronicles. It is published from its commencement, for the first time. The editions by Archbishop Parker, and William Wats, severally begin at the Norman Conquest.

58. MEMORIALE FRATRIS WALTERI DE COVENTRIA.—THE HISTORICAL COLLECTIONS OF WALTER OF COVENTRY. Vols. I. and II. Edited, from the MS. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1872-1873.

This work, now printed in full for the first time, has long been a desideratum by Historical Scholars. The first portion, however, is not of much importance, being only a compilation from earlier writers. The part relating to the first quarter of the thirteenth century is the most valuable and interesting.

59. THE ANGLO-LATIN SATIRICAL POETS AND EPIGRAMMATISTS OF THE TWELFTH CENTURY. Vols. I. and II. Collected and edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A., Corresponding Member of the National Institute of France (Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres). 1872.

The Poems contained in these volumes have long been known and appreciated as the best satires of the age in which their authors flourished, and were deservedly popular during the 13th and 14th centuries.

60. MATERIALS FOR A HISTORY OF THE REIGN OF HENRY VII., FROM ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS PRESERVED IN THE PUBLIC RECORD OFFICE. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the REV. WILLIAM CAMPBELL, M.A., one of His Majesty's Professors in the University of Cambridge. 1873-1877.

These volumes are of great value, illustrating the actual proceedings of Henry VII. on ascending the throne, and shadow out the policy he afterwards adopted.

61. HISTORICAL PAPERS AND LETTERS FROM THE NORTHERN REGISTERS. Edited by JAMES RAINE, M.A., Canon of York, and Secretary of the Surtees Society. 1873.

The documents in this volume illustrate, for the most part, the general history of the north of England, particularly in its relation to Scotland.

62. REGISTRUM PALATINUM DUNELMENSE. THE REGISTER OF RICHARD DE KELLAWE, LORD PALATINE AND BISHOP OF DURHAM; 1311-1316. Vols. I., II., III., and IV. Edited by Sir THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, D.C.L., Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. 1873-1878.

Bishop Kellawe's Register contains the proceedings of his prelaacy, both lay and ecclesiastical, and is the earliest Register of the Palatinate of Durham.

63. MEMORIALS OF SAINT DUNSTAN ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY. Edited, from various MSS., by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1874.

This volume contains several lives of Archbishop Dunstan, one of the most celebrated Primates of Canterbury. They open various points of Historical and Literary interest, without which our knowledge of the period would be more incomplete than it is at present.

64. CHRONICON ANGLIÆ, AB ANNO DOMINI 1328 USQUE AD ANNUM 1388, AUCTORE MONACHO QUODAM SANCTI ALBANI. Edited by EDWARD MAUNDE THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, and Assistant-Keeper of the Manuscripts in the British Museum. 1874.

This chronicle gives a circumstantial history of the close of the reign of Edward III. which has hitherto been considered lost.

65. THÓMAS SAGA ERKIBYSKUPS. A LIFE OF ARCHBISHOP THOMAS BECKET, IN ICELANDIC. Vol. I. Edited, with English Translation, Notes, and Glossary, by M. EIRÍKR MAGNÚSSON, Sub-Librarian of the University Library, Cambridge. 1875.

This work is derived from the Life of Becket written by Benedict of Peterborough, and apparently supplies the missing portions in Benedict's biography.

66. RADULPHI DE COGGESHALL CHRONICON ANGLICANUM. Edited by the REV. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A. 1875.

This volume contains the "Chronicon Anglicanum," by Ralph of Coggeshall, the "Libellus de Expugnatione Terræ Sanctæ per Saladinum," usually ascribed to the same author, and other pieces of an interesting character.

67. MATERIALS FOR THE HISTORY OF THOMAS BECKET, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by the REV. JAMES CRAIGIE ROBERTSON, M.A., Canon of Canterbury. 1875-1877.

This Publication will comprise all contemporary materials for the history of Archbishop Thomas Becket. The first volume contains the life of that celebrated man, and the miracles after his death, by William, a monk of Canterbury. The second, the life by Benedict of Peterborough; John of Salisbury; Alan of Tewkesbury; and Edward Grim. The third, the life by William Fitzstephen; and Herbert of Bosham.

68. RADULFI DE DICETO DECANI LUNDONIENSIS OPERA HISTORICA. THE HISTORICAL WORKS OF MASTER RALPH DE DICETO, DEAN OF LONDON. Vols. I. and II. Edited, from the Original Manuscripts, by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1876.

The Historical Works of Ralph de Diceto are some of the most valuable materials for British History. The Abbreviationes Chronicorum extend from the Creation to 1147, and the Ymagines Historiarum to 1201.

69. ROLL OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE KING'S COUNCIL IN IRELAND, FOR A PORTION OF THE 16TH YEAR OF THE REIGN OF RICHARD II. 1392-93. Edited by the Rev. JAMES GRAVES, A.B. 1877.

The Roll printed in this volume throws considerable light on the History of Ireland at a period when little is known of it, and seems to be the only document of the kind extant.

70. HENRICI DE BRAXTON DE LEGIBUS ET CONSUETUDINIBUS ANGLIÆ. LIBRI QUINQUE IN VARIOS TRACTATUS DISTINCTI. AD DIVERSORUM ET VETUSTISSIMORUM CODICUM COLLATIONEM TYPIS VULGATI. Vols. I. and II. Edited by SIR TRAVERS TWISS, Q.C., D.C.L. 1878-1879.

This is a new edition of Bracton's celebrated work, collated with MSS. in the British Museum; the Libraries of Lincoln's Inn, the Middle Temple, and Gray's Inn; the Bodleian Library, Oxford; the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris; &c. &c.

71. THE HISTORIANS OF THE CHURCH OF YORK, AND ITS ARCHBISHOPS. Vol. I. Edited by JAMES RAINE, M.A., Canon of York, and Secretary of the Surtees Society. 1879.

This will form a complete "Corpus Historicum Eboracense," a work very much needed, and of great value to the Historical Inquirer.

WORKS PUBLISHED IN PHOTOZINCOGRAPHY.

DOMESDAY BOOK, or the GREAT SURVEY OF ENGLAND OF WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, 1086; fac-simile of the Part relating to each county, separately (with a few exceptions of double counties). Photozincographed, by Her Majesty's Command, at the Ordnance Survey Office, Southampton, Colonel SIR HENRY JAMES, R.E., F.R.S., &c., Director. 35 Parts, imperial quarto and demy quarto (1861-1863) boards. Price 4s. 6d. to 1l. 1s. each Part, according to size; or, bound in 2 Vols., 18l. (The edition in two volumes is out of print.)

This important and unique survey of the greater portion of England* is the oldest and most valuable record in the national archives. It was commenced about the year 1084 and finished in 1086. Its compilation was determined upon at Gloucester by William the Conqueror, in council, in order that he might know what was due to him, in the way of tax, from his subjects, and that each at the same time might know what he had to pay. It was compiled as much for their protection as for the benefit of the sovereign. The nobility and people had been grievously distressed at the time by the king bringing over large numbers of French and Bretons, and quartering them on his subjects, "each according to the measure of his land," for the purpose of resisting the invasion of Cnut, King of Denmark, which was apprehended. The commissioners appointed to make the survey were to inquire the name of each place; who held it in the time of King Edward the Confessor; the present possessor; how many hides were in the manor; how many ploughs were in demesne; how many homagers; how many villeins; how many cottars; how many serving men; how many free tenants; how many tenants in soccage; how much wood, meadow, and pasture; the number of mills and fish-ponds; what had been added or taken away from the place; what was the gross value in the time of Edward the Confessor; the present value; and how much each free man or soc-man had, and whether any advance could be made in the value. Thus could be ascertained who held the estate in the time of King Edward; who then held it; its value in the time of the late king; and its value as it stood at the formation of the survey. So minute was the survey, that the writer of the contemporary portion of the Saxon Chronicle records, with some asperity—"So very narrowly he caused it to be traced out, that there was not a single hide, nor one virgate of land, nor even, "it is shame to tell, though it seemed to him no shame to do, an ox, nor a cow, nor a swine left, that was not set down."

Domesday Survey is in two parts or volumes. The first, in folio, contains the counties of Bedford, Berks, Bucks, Cambridge, Chester and Lancaster, Cornwall, Derby, Devon, Dorset, Gloucester, Hants, Hereford, Herts, Huntingdon, Kent, Leicester and Rutland, Lincoln, Middlesex, Northampton, Nottingham, Oxford, Salop, Somerset, Stafford, Surrey, Sussex, Warwick, Wilts, Worcester, and York. The second volume, in quarto, contains the counties of Essex, Norfolk, and Suffolk.

Domesday Book was printed verbatim et literatim during the last century, in consequence of an address of the House of Lords to King George III. in 1767. It was not, however, commenced until 1773, and was completed early in 1783. In 1860, Her Majesty's Government, with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls, determined to apply the art of photozincography to the production of a fac-simile of Domesday Book, under the superintendence of Colonel Sir Henry James, R.E., Director of the Ordnance Survey, Southampton. The fac-simile was completed in 1863.

* For some reason left unexplained, many parts were left unsurveyed. Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Durham, are not described in the survey; nor does Lancashire appear under its proper name, but Furness, and the northern part of Lancashire, as well as the south of Westmoreland, with a part of Cumberland, are included within the West Riding of Yorkshire. That part of Lancashire which lies between the Ribbles and Mersey, and which at the time of the survey comprehended six manors, is joined to Cheshire. Part of Rutland is described in the counties of Northampton and Lincoln.

FAC-SIMILES OF NATIONAL MANUSCRIPTS, from WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR to QUEEN ANNE, selected under the direction of the Master of the Rolls, and Photozincographed, by Command of Her Majesty, by Colonel SIR HENRY JAMES, R.E., Director of the Ordnance Survey. Price, each Part, with translations and notes, double foolscap folio, 16s.

Part I. (William the Conqueror to Henry VII.). 1865.

Part II. (Henry VIII. and Edward VI.). 1866.

Part III. (Mary and Elizabeth). 1867.

Part IV. (James I. to Anne). 1868.

The first Part extends from William the Conqueror to Henry VII., and contains autographs of the kings of England, as well as of many other illustrious personages famous in history, and some interesting charters, letters patent, and state papers. The second Part, for the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., consists principally of holograph letters and autographs of kings, princes, statesmen, and other persons of great historical interest, who lived during those reigns. The third Part contains similar documents for the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth, including a signed bill of Lady Jane Grey. The fourth Part concludes the series, and comprises a number of documents taken from the originals belonging to the Constable of the Tower of London; also several records illustrative of the Gunpowder Plot, and a woodcut containing portraits of Mary Queen of Scots and James VI., circulated by their adherents in England, 1580-3.

This work is intended to form a comprehensive Palæographic Series for Ireland. It will furnish characteristic specimens of the documents which have come down from each of the classes which, in past ages, formed principal elements in the population of Ireland, or exercised an influence in her affairs. With these reproductions will be combined fac-similes of writings connected with eminent personages or transactions of importance in the annals of the country to the end of the reign of Queen Anne.

The specimens are reproduced as nearly as possible in accordance with the originals, in dimensions, colouring, and general appearance. Characteristic examples of styles of writing and caligraphic ornamentation are, so far as practicable, associated with subjects of historic and linguistic interest. Descriptions of the various manuscripts are given by the Editor in the Introduction. The contents of the specimens are fully elucidated and printed in the original languages opposite to the Fac-similes—line for line—without contractions—thus facilitating reference and aiding effectively those interested in palæographic studies.

Part I. contains upwards of seventy coloured specimens, commencing with the earliest Irish MSS. extant.

Part II. extends from the Twelfth Century to A.D. 1299, and contains ninety specimens in colours.

In Part III.—now in the Press—the Work will be carried down to the end of the reign of Henry VIII.

(This work is sold also by Letts, Son, & Co., 33, King William Street;
E. Stanford, Charing Cross; J. Wyld, Charing Cross; B. Quaritch, 15, Piccadilly; W. & A. K. Johnston, Edinburgh; and Hodges, Foster & Co., Dublin.)
